Not much lost–except homes

End of the end of the line

Renovation plans for squalid hotels leave old tenants noplace to go

A sign over the entrance at 550 Johnson says, "Eastern Hotel."

Long past its prime, the building hasn't seen any real hotel guests for decades.

It's been home to people living in the shadow of affluence — winos, burnt-out people who have reached the end of the line.

Ten of them still live there and by next Thursday, they have to leave.

The Eastern is one of several buildings scheduled for gutting and renovation.

In all, 10 brick tenements backing on the courtyard behind the Government Street liquor store will be restored by Victoria alderman and developer Sam Bawlf.

The courtyard will be turned into a European-style produce market and shopping square. The buildings will be remodelled to accommodate shops. The upper floors will be used for residential purposes.

By most standards, not much will be lost when the Eastern Hotel is finally closed, but to those still trying to find other places to live, the dingy rooms are all they have got.

"I guess next Thursday it's the streets for me," says Nelson Hiebert.

"I've been killing cockroaches all morning," he adds. There are hundreds of red spots on the floor.

Hiebert is 55 and on welfare.

"I've tried to get a place. I've tried everything"

He's only lived in the Eastern for three months, but they have been frightening months.

"I was robbed four times, and once I was beaten up. They just kicked my door in and started taking my things.

"I picked up a bottle and let one of them have it, but there was four of them and they beat the hell out of me," says Hiebert.

Most of the doors already have padlocks on them. The hallways are filthy. A stench of urine permeates the building.

Louis West, 59, is one of the luckier ones. He found a room at another hotel.

"My friend Einar fixed me up with a room at the Drake," says West.

Einar turns out to be the manager of the entire complex that is to be remodelled. His name is Einar Norgaard and he has been managing "the block" for 21 years.

"You got a strong stomach?" he asks.

He opens the door to one of the rooms and the sight is incredible.

Filth everywhere. An unmade bed with sheets that look grey. Bottles strewn on the floor. Windows dirty. Frying pans with half-rotten food on a hotplate.

"The guy died last week," says Norgaard. "Suicide, I think." Norgaard adds that he has seen more violence in the past 21 years than he cares to remember.

"I never walk through here (the hotel) unarmed at night," he says.

Two old men sit on a bench in the hallway. "Eh, I have a cheque for you," Norgaard says to one of them.

It's the provincial Mincome supplement payment.

He points to another room.

"This guy keeps his room spotless," he says.

The room is clean, but an old bedstead, a table and a chair are the only furnishings. The room has no window and the only light comes from a dusty bulb hanging on a wire from the ceiling.

Norgaard says it was im-

Last day to fish for prizes

The 20th edition of the King Fisherman Contest ends today at midnight, which still leaves time to catch a trophy fish or one that may be drawn for a CP Air expense-paid trip for two to Australia or Fiji.

Weigh-in stations are asked to make sure all entries are in the mail by Monday morning to facilitate a quick wrapup of contest results and prize awards.

German scientist:

Birds suspected to be lung cancer carriers

AP, UPI

FLORENCE, Italy — Migratory birds may be carriers of lung cancer, says a German scientist.

Dr. Nicholas Kraus of the Institute of Hygiene at the University of Dusseldorf, reported in a paper presented at the 11th International Cancer Congress here that the highest lung cancer mortality rate was observed in northern European countries.

A study showed that Finland had more cases than Sweden, and Scotland more cases then the rest of Britain, he said.

"Further investigations showed that the majority of cases in rural regions appear in the extreme north of Norway and in the region of the great lakes in Finland."

A study of all related factors from tumor-producing substances, smoking, infectious factors to nutrition, personal habits, and radiation did not seem to influence the high rate of lung cancer, the paper said.

Dr. Kraus said because the virus theory as a cause of cancer is "more and more accepted by a growing number of scientists" and because migratory birds are known carriers of virus infections, an analysis was made.

"Our investigations disclosed surprising results: the greatest density of lung cancer was found exactly in those regions where certain species of birds end their migration," he said.

"It seems that only this biological phenomenon could explain the strange distribution of lung cancer in neighboring states of Northern Europe."

U.S. scientists reported evidence that a virus may cause breast cancer in women.

Support for the virus theory came from the isolation last year of a suspected virus by researchers at the Michigan Cancer Foundation.

The foundation announced four months ago that extensive testing would begin to determine if the virus was a "true human breast cancer virus."

If tests proved positive, researchers said, it would open the way for a major research effort to cure or prevent the disease.

Dr. Michael Brennan, president of the Michigan foundation, said that expected confirmations of the virus research may spur international activity toward testing of a vaccine within two years.

Breast cancer is the largest killer of women aged 35 to 55 in the United States. Of about 350,000 cancer victims reported in 1972, about 32,000 died of breast cancer.

Recent breast cancer operations on both First Lady Betty Ford and Nelson Rockefeller's wife, Happy, have spurred a surge in checkups by women around the world.

Evidence that breast cancer has increased among women in industrialized countries, including a paper by a Regina researcher, has led to sharp

Smallwood rejected in new leadership bid

ST. JOHN'S Nfld. (UPI) — Former premier Joseph Smallwood was denied a second chance Saturday when incumbent Edward Roberts was re-elected leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland.

The leadership convention was delayed for 15 minutes when police cleared the 800 delegates from the centre because of a telephoned bomb threat. No device was found by police.

Roberts, 34, was re-elected leader on the second ballot with 403 votes to 298 for Smallwood. Two other candidates dropped out after the first ballot when Roberts got 337 votes and Smallwood 305.

Stephen Neary was eliminated from the running when he received only 24 votes on the first ballot. Rogers Simmons got 57 votes and he withdrew of his own volition.

Roberts succeeded Smallwood as party leader on Feb. 5, 1972, when Smallwood stepped down after 23 years as Liberal chief. Smallwood, 73, brought Newfoundland into Confederation in 1949 and governed the province until his retirement from politics two years ago.

Smallwood
. . . 'school boy'

Smallwood announced only last month he was ending his retirement and re-entering provincial politics.

He said after his defeat in the leadership race Saturday that he will continue to help the party. He said his defeat by Roberts was "not one of humiliation."

"I feel like I did when I resigned from politics two years ago," he said. "I said then that I felt like a schoolboy let out of school."

Conservative Premier Frank Moores said he had thought Roberts would win with stronger support. "I thought he was going to win more decisively than he did," Moores said. "I thought it was a very indecisive victory."

Hostages still held

THE HAGUE (UPI) — Two Arabs and two Dutch convicts are holding at least 22 hostages including several women and children seized Saturday during a Catholic mass in the chapel of Scheveningen prison.

Police said one of the convicts was a Palestinian serving five years for burning a British jet at Amsterdam's airport March 3.

Instant lawsuits if rents go up

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Tenants Organization will take landlords to court if they issue notices for rent increases that exceed the B.C. government's 8-per-cent ceiling on increases, organization president Bruce Yorke said Saturday.

The Rental Housing Council of B.C., representing 1,600 landlords, said Friday it had discovered a technicality which would permit rent increases averaging 20 per cent in January.

Council chairman Bruce Innes said council lawyers say the 8-per-cent rent ceiling, in the Residential Interim Rent Stabilization Act, instituted in May, expired Oct. 1, when the new Landlord and Tenant Act was proclaimed.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said the ceiling still applied.

Yorke said the tenant organization would ask the attorney-general to see to it that prosecution of landlords who exceed the 8-per-cent ceiling "proceeds with the greatest possible dispatch."

"The landlords' lawlessness must be dealt with resolutely by the government," Yorke said. "It is more imperative than ever that the provisions of the Interim Rent Stabilization Act remain in force and under no circumstances be altered at this session of the legislature."

possible to keep the building clean.

"They would mess it up in every conceivable way," he says, adding that it wasn't uncommon for some of the tenants to relieve themselves in the hallways or vomit on the floors after some heavy drinking.

Norgaard stresses that "the other side" was different. The buildings on the Pandora side of the tenement block, he says, had housed almost exclusively Chinese people.

Most of them have already found other quarters, he says, but then he knocks at one of the doors.

The suite has two occupants, an old Chinese couple.

Mrs. Nui Oy Ho is 68 years old. She has lived in downtown Victoria most of her life, the last nine years at the present suite.

"I like it here, but I have to leave," she says in broken English.

Perhaps she will move in with one of her daughters. It's kind of difficult right now to make any decisions, she says, because her husband is in hospital.

The suite looks old-fashioned, but everything is spotless. "In two months I must move," she says. Residents of the Johnson Street suites have until the end of the year to find other homes.

Bawlf says he's trying everything to help relocate the people. He says he's checking every week on how many have been unable to find other accommodation.

Bawlf gave some of the residents of the Eastern and Senator Hotels, which is also included in the complex, a month's free rent to ease the transition.

Big 'score' in Chicago still mystery

CHICAGO (UPI) — Seven weeks ago, the tip filtered out of the underworld that there would be "a big weekend score" in Chicago.

That was an understatement.

And, although state, county and federal law enforcement agencies knew of the tip and posted stakeouts, nobody told the Chicago police who might have been able to head off the heist of the century.

The "score" was the looting of an Armored Express Co. vault last weekend of an estimated $4.3 million in $10, $20, $50 and $100 bills.

It was the greatest criminal score, in terms of folding money lifted, in U.S. history. In world terms of criminal endeavor, it is topped only by the $7.6 million great British train robbery of 1962.

In bulk terms, the burglars hauled away about 800 pounds in bills, probably in paper shopping bags.

No one on record is sure as to just when the boodle was lifted. But it must have been between 9:26 p.m. Oct. 19, when two Armored Express employees locked the vault after stashing a $1.3 million shipment from Hawthorne race track, and 1:10 a.m. Monday, when gasoline-filled bags left in the vault by the thieves caught fire, apparently ignited by time fuses.

Rewards totalling $265,000 have been offered for the return of the money and the capture of its thieves by Puraltor Security Inc., parent firm of Armored Express, and Commercial Insurance Co., which is stuck for most of the insurance on the cash.

Police across the country are looking for it, of course. So, it is believed by police, are members of the crime syndicate who may not have been in on the super-burglary but who hate to think of that much loose cash lying around.

One man — the inside man, authorities say — has been charged, but police don't have him. He was gone from his suburban Berwyn home when agents went to get him Friday.

Two more, including a self-styled "career crook ... master criminal," have been questioned and released, although police said they are still keeping an eye on them — as some law agencies were after the tip of the "big score."

A fourth man, described as a wizard with burglar alarms who has crime syndicate connections, hasn't been found.

For all the snafus, police could not help but admire what they called a "superbly planned" job.

This is how they think it happened:

There were probaby two dry runs at the heist, since there had been that many false burglary reports from the building.

Someone from the inside let the burglars-in.

An electronics expert on the team of thieves took care of the alarm on the vault door, even though no wires were found to be cut.

Then the gang — from four to six men, police believe, using a walkie-talkie to keep in touch with their lookout — hauled the money away, hauled the gasoline bags inside, and, it appears, left the vault door open a crack in the knowledge that lack of oxygen might quench a fire.

It all could have happened as much as 30 hours before the bags blazed, police believe.

Next Game: Monday — James Bay vs. Ingraham, Memorial Arena.

Undefeated Lake Cowichan Lakers poured 49 shots at goalkeeper Brian O'Neill on the way to a 6-0 triumph Saturday night over visiting Ingraham Buckaroos.

The win increased the Lakers' lead in the South Island Big Six Hockey League to six points over second-place Stockers North Americans.

In a game at Chemainus, Chemainus Blues downed winless James Bay Athletic Association Gulls, 8-4, to pull into a deadlock with Buckaroos.

Bob Riddell scored twice and Jim Peterson, Alvin White, Rod Hunter and Ray Bansely had one each for Lakers. John Lindsay in the winners nets made 24 saves for the shutout.

Dave Griff was the only Blues player to score two goals. Joe Piper, Pete Lemon, Don Smith, Vern Lambourne, Bob Wilson and Barry Wiebe were the other Chemainus scorers. Kelly Christiansen, with two goals, Cliff Weist and Perry Head got the James Bay goals.

controversy among delegates to the cancer congress.

Researchers from Israel and Finland also reported that population studies indicated breast cancer is on the rise. But others from the United States and Australia said breast cancer appeared stable.

The evidence presented at a symposium on trends in cancer incidence was questioned by several epidemiologists, researchers who determine the state of diseases in large populatiin groups.

The American and Australian scientists said there had been an apparent rise in recent years, but it was due to better detection through mass-screening prevention programs, not to an actual rise in cases.

Dr. T. H. Barclay of the Allan Blair Memorial Clinic in Regina had reported earlier that a study of breast cancer in 800 women showed there was a marked increase in incidence.

"In Saskatchewan, the crude incidence rate for cancer of the female breast almost doubled in the 25-year period 1946 to 1970," he said.

Your good health

By G. C. THOSTESON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Writing about itching, you told about a steroid, or cortisone-type ointment to stop it. I went to our drug store to ask for it and he won't give it to me without our doctor's prescription. Please tell me why. — Mrs. J. K.

Because he's a law-abiding pharmacist.

Cortisone in its various forms is a powerful medication, and can be harmful unless used under the supervision of a physician who knows how much to use, and knows what warning signs to watch for, in case the patient is getting too much.

There's a secondary reason, too. A prescription indicates that a physician has diagnosed the patient's condition and is in a position to decide what medication is the right one.

Steroid ointment can be useful in controlling some types of itching but would be totally useless for other kinds of itches. Used for the wrong kind of itch, it would be a waste of money, would do no good, might be harmful — and in any event you'd still have the itch.

Terrorists claim blasts, want buddies free

NEW YORK (UPI) — Five bombs exploded minutes apart across midtown and Lower Manhattan early Saturday, shattering windows and damaging building facades of banks and large corporations. A Puerto Rican nationalist group said it planted the bombs.

There were no injuries in the series of bomb blasts which began at 3 a.m. when the first explosion ripped the facade of the Exxon building at Sixth Avenue and 50th Street.

The group, called itself the Armed Forces of Puerto Rican National Liberation, called for unconditional independence for Puerto Rico and demanded the release of five Puerto Ricans whom they said were being held as political prisoners in federal penitentiaries across the country.

One of the prisoners, 62-year-old Oscar Collazo, was jailed after he and another man shot their way into Blair House in Washington on Nov. 1, 1950, in an attempt to assassinate president Truman. Collazo's companion and a White House guard were killed in the incident, and two other persons were wounded.

Collazo was to have been executrd on Aug. 1, 1952, but his sentence was commuted to life in prison.

The other four prisoners, including a woman, Lolita Lebron, charged onto the floor of the House of Representatives on March 2, 1954, shouting "Viva Puerto Rico" and waving a Puerto Rican flag, and fired 20 to 25 shots at random, wounding five congressmen, two seriously. All the congressmen survived.

In addition to the Exxon blast, another bomb exploded in an auto in the financial district, shattering windows in the Chemical, Chase Manhattan and Marine Midland banks.

The other three bombs exploded in the midtown area, one outside the Banco de Ponce in the Eastern Airlines building at Rockefeller Plaza, the second near the Union Carbide building at 48th Street and Park Avenue, and the third at 53rd Street and Park Avenue, near the Lever Brothers building.

Police said they were checking "relatively minor leads" and questioning witnesses.

—AP

Aftermath of Manhattan bomb

Assistant Chief James Sullivan believes the nationalist group is "a new name, but we feel it is affiliated with Puerto Rica independence groups in the past that are continuing into the present."

Forty minutes after the first blast, a man called the Associated Press offices and said, "listen carefully."

A woman then took the phone, identified herself as a member of the Armed Forces of Puerto Rican National Liberation and announced. "We have just bombed Yankee imperialist banks. Free all Puerto Rican political prisoners."

At 9:25 a.m., a man with a thick Puerto Rican accent telephoned the offices of United Press International and said: "I want to tell the people of the United States, I'm going to blow up all of Washington and New York unless the five political prisoners are released in 30 days."

The man refused to say whether he was a member of the group claiming credit for the bombings.

In the earlier call, an AP newsman was directed to a telephone booth at 73rd Street and Broadway where there was an envelope containing a statement by the group.

The statement said in part: "These actions have been taken in memory of the Oct. 30, 1950, actions in Puerto Rico against Yanqui (Yankee) colonial domination.

"These bombings are also to accentuate the seriousness of demands to release five political prisoners in this hemisphere and the immediate and unconditional independence of Puerto Rico.

The prisoners identified in the statement were Collazo, Lebron, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Andres Figueroa Cordero, and Irving Flores Rodriquez.

'Spill ruined us,' —Irish fishermen

CORK, Ireland (UPI) — Oil workers and volunteers Saturday pumped thousands of gallons of detergent into the sea to break up a massive oil slick that fouled 22 miles of Ireland's southwest coast, damaged fishing and threatened scenic resorts.

"We have been completely overwhelmed by the magnitude of the spillage," said a spokesman for Cork county council.

The spill, estimated by Gulf Oil officials at between 200,000 and 250,000 gallons of crude, was described as one of Europe's biggest.

It began Tuesday when the 80,500-ton tanker Universal Leader was lying at the Gulf transshipment terminal on Whiddy Island in Bantry Bay at the southwest tip of Ireland.

Company officials first reported only 8,000 gallons had spilled, then revised the estimate after angry coastal fishermen reported their nets and fishing grounds fouled by the seeping mass of black sludge.

Company officials rushed extra spraying equipment and thousands of gallons of oil pollution dispersant to the area. Hundreds of local volunteers joined in the cleanup.

"All other operations have been suspended," a Gulf official said. "All available manpower and equipment has been thrown into the fight."

A sudden wind change Friday night sent the oil slick lapping right up to Bantry town and threatened to spread to the Kerry coastline.

Officials said the spill threatened Garnish Island, a popular tourist spot warmed by the temperate currents of the Gulf Stream, where tropical and sub-tropical plants thrive.

Fishermen along the coast frantically dragged boats and equipment to safety.

"It has ruined us," a spokesman for the Cork Fishermen's Association said. "We are demanding compensation from the company."

Cork county council officials said their oil pollution disaster plan, drawn up after Gulf Oil opened its terminal in 1969, had proved "completely inadequate."

Sex pact 'without'

LONDON (Reuter) — Michael Wilson, the 29-year-old Welsh miner's son who plans to marry 77-year-old American millionairess Rachel Fitler, says he has made a sex pact with his bride-to-be.

"Obviously, we're not marring for sexual attraction," Wilson said in an interview.

"Miss Fitler and I will sleep in separate rooms after the wedding."

Wilson considers himself as "just a normal guy who wants to marry a woman."

Pictured drinking with pretty girls in a club on Guernsey, Wilson is repoted to have said: "Rachel said enjoy yourself, and that's what I'm doing."

—Car crunch hard to bear

QUESNEL (CP) — Lothar Kesper, 50, of North Vancouver escaped injury when his car collided with a bear and the bear took a second run at the car before ambling off. The incident occurred north of this Cariboo community.

Kesper said the bear barrelled out of the bush onto the highway and struck his car. The bear backed off — then charged again, apparently unhurt, the animal returned to the bush. Kesper was uninjured but damage to his car is estimated at about $1,500.

French studying fuels from plants

PARIS (AP)—The French government says it will investigate a process for producing liquid fuel from straw, sugar beets or trees.

The Petroleum Institute and the ministry of industry said they will examine the process developed several years ago by Henri Rothlisberger, a retired inventor who holds a number of patents, including one for the propeller of the liner France.

Under the Rothlisberger process demonstrated to government experts, a mixture of isopropylic alcohol and isopropylic ether is produced from cellulose bases.

The resulting fluid has an octane rating of about 98 and can be mixed with regular gasoline in any proportion for use in combustion engines, Rothlisberger says. No adjustment of the engine is necessary, he said.

Ford will meet Brezhnev

MOSCOW (AP) — President Ford of the United States and Soviet Leader Leonid Brezhnev will meet near Vladivostok in the Soviet far east on Nov. 23-24 to discuss "matters of mutual interest," the White House and the Kremlin announced Saturday.

The session, following Ford's planned visits to Japan and South Korea, will give Brezhnev a chance to size up the new president while they work on narrowing differences over a new nuclear arms limitation agreement. The Middle East and European security are also expected to be high on the agenda.

Narrowing the differences on arms limitation began during the current Moscow visit of U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger. He has claimed progress in his three days of talks with Brezhnev, but described the bargaining as tough.

U.S. officials said Kissinger and Brezhnev have not reached an agreement, but were optimistic one could be achieved by the time the Soviet leader visits Washington early next summer.

The official announcement of the November summit, both here and in Washington, said only that the two leaders would meet "in the vicinity of Vladivostok to exchange views on matters of mutual interest."

Vladivostok, a strategic port and naval headquarters for the Soviet Pacific fleet, is 450 miles north of South Korean capital of Seoul, where Ford will visit Nov. 22-23. The city, which includes shipbuilding and aviation industries is normally closed to Westerners.

can I help you hear better?

RON GERMAIN

Certified Hearing Aid Audiologist is waiting to serve you with 18 years of hearing aid experience.

If you have a problem with a hearing aid — Beltone, or any other make we invite you to bring it into our office.

Ron Germain has experience in adjusting hearing aid fittings to overcome the common complaints of whistling, excessive background noise and overly harsh amplification, that affects your ability to understand speech clearly. He will also clean your aid and make any minor adjustment that may be needed. Often that's all it takes to get a quality hearing aid back into good operating condition, and he will do this at no charge.

If you'd rather just sit down and talk about your hearing problem and some of the ways hearing problems can be helped today, he'll take the time to do it. And again, he will do it without any charge whatsoever.

So if you have a problem with a hearing aid or the service you are receiving, please call or come in. We sincerely feel we can show you the better way to better hearing.

Francophones first

WHILE CANADA'S Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau is demonstrating his anxiety to kiss and make up with the successor of the late Charles de Gaulle, the minister for manpower and immigration in Ottawa, Robert Andras, has disclosed an immigration policy frankly preferential for francophone peoples.

Just how badly Franco-Canadian relations had deteriorated since General de Gaulle's notorious "vive le Quebec libre" outburst in 1967 can be judged by a number of recent incidents. For instance, when French Health Minister Simone Veil scheduled a visit to Canada in September, Quebec, not Ottawa, was the destination designated. Ottawa sidestepped this diplomatic swipe by issuing its own invitation to the minister.

And a Gaullist deputy, according to Time Magazine, asked Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues whether it was proper for President Valery Giscard d'Estaing to receive Mr. Trudeau on his current visit before he had met Quebec's Premier Robert Bourassa.

It is just as well that the insult of seven years ago should be forgotten, and Mr. Trudeau is to be congratulated on seeking to bury it out of sight without any loss of dignity on the part of the Canadian government.

Canadians, for the most part, will be happy to see a normalization of diplomatic relationship with a nation that has such strong historical ties with this country.

But let's not overdo it.

Why, for example, should French-speaking immigrants be given preference over all others, as Mr. Andras has clearly decided?

"We are heavily engaged in consultation in a co-operative spirit with the government of the province of Quebec in full recognition that it is desirable for Canada to maintain a large number of francophone immigrants to this country," Mr. Andras told the House of Commons last Tuesday.

Again, why? What's so special about francophones?

Are immigrants from such lands as Togo, Gaboon, the Congo or Burundi—with a language heritage from colonial days — to be preferred over Danes and Swedes and Englishmen? Are Swiss, Belgians and, for that matter Frenchmen, better immigrant material than Germans and Mexicans and Scots?

It is doubtful.

In a country plagued with unemployment Mr. Andras is taking steps to reduce the anticipated influx in years to come from a current 250,000 to 200,000. Some may wonder if this is a sufficient restraint. Or even if Mr. Andras' new regulations are going to be effective to the extent he predicts.

Mr. Andras did not answer a question in the House of Commons as to whether immigration regulations would prevent the minister of supply and services, Jean-Pierre Goyer, bringing a proposed 20,000 South Koreans to work in development of the Athabaska tar sands.

It was not relevant in any event.

But Canadians are entitled to ask for a better explanation than has been offered thus far for the preferential treatment of francophone immigrants. It appears totally unjustifiable—except as a means of bolstering the political power-base by which this government hopes to perpetuate itself.

Reflections in the forest

More pay for the MPs

PRIVY COUNCIL PRESIDENT Mitchell Sharp has told the House of Commons, in reply to a question from Real Caouette, that "it is my intention to try to persuade the government to bring forward some proposals about members' salaries. Since he hardly could have said so without some assurance that his attempts will not be in vain, and since he also expressed his hope that "we will have non-partisan support on this issue," this is tantamount to saying that a pay increase is in the offing for the MPs.

The last time the members voted themselves an increase in remuneration there was widespread criticism, including opposition from several of the MPs, although whether this was playing politics on the part of the parliamentarians, which Mr. Sharp also said he wishes to avoid, is a matter of opinion. But the circumstances then, in 1971, and now are not exactly the same.

The members gave themselves a 50 per cent increase in salary in 1971, from $12,000 to $18,000. They also have a tax-free (and therefore more substantial than it may appear) expense allowance of $8,000, or slightly more in some cases.

It is not surprising if they feel hard-done-by, perhaps, by comparison with British Columbia MLAs getting $24,000 for much less work. A parliamentary official is quoted in a report from Ottawa as estimating that the average MP works about 60 hours a week. We have all heard, too, the sad stories of the costs of maintaining in many cases two homes, and the demands on members by all manner of good causes.

Furthermore, the suggestion is that the proposal this time might be an increase only in line with the cost of living — another $5,000 or so to match inflation since 1971; a little matter of 28 per cent.

And as Mr. Caouette remarked, everyone is asking for the alignment of wages and the cost of living, "even federal public servants earning $45,000 or $50,000 a year." Which must make the MPs feel pretty small.

So there probably will be less flaming brimstone when the members get an increase this time. But it still would be a good idea if they could agree on a formula to keep themselves up with the cost of living on a regular basis and in smaller jumps.

The change in Barney Danson

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

It doesn't take long.

There was Barnett Jerome "Barney" Danson, Liberal MP from Toronto's North York, 53, first elected to the Commons only six years ago.

Amiable, modest to the point almost of self-effacement, his first two terms in the Commons were entirely undistinguished, with perhaps his largest contribution to parliamentary enlightenment being his suggestion and unsuccessful promotion of what he called "Cashex."

It was to be the answer to all those credit cards — something, at last, for the poor guy with the 19th century mind who pays cash on the barrelhead for the stuff he buys -- a small discount.

Seemed to make sense, too, for it the consumer lays out cash and saves the vendor all the expense of the paper-work in carrying charges, it only figures he should share in the saving.

The way the credit card system worked — and still does — Barney Danson argued, the old-fashioned-type buying for cash subsidized the "charge-it" crowd.

His "Cashex" idea got nowhere, so Danson dropped it.

Until then, he was just another Liberal backbencher with a bright idea that whiffed, a nice, smiling, easy-going type who made no waves.

If he had any hard and fast positions on controversial issues like English bilingualism or French unilingualism, he never jumped up and down, shouting and waving on them.

And then suddenly, the hand that giveth all federal goodies was laid in blessing on the Danson head, and Barney found himself the parliamentary secretary to Prime Minister Trudeau.

Came next the election and Barnett Jerome Danson became The Honorable, the Minister of Urban Affairs.

The transformation was complete.

The formerly inoffensive, unobtrusive Liberal backbencher who managed to avoid all controversy seemingly overnight became a hard-line convert to bilingualism.

The kind of convert fired with such zeal as to subscribe to the proposition that it is a national obligation of the English not only to embrace bilingualism but to tolerate, understand, and in his own words "adapt to" French unilingualism in Quebec.

And the kind of convert who yells "bigot" when anyone argues, and views those who question this double standard on language as, again in his own words "rednecks or whatever."

It might all be academic if The Hon. Barney was not urban affairs minister and in a position to help enforce the new Liberal government policy — never approved by Parliament, and in direct contravention of the constitution — to make the national capital a two-province city, one part in Ontario, the other in Quebec.

He admits the government is "gambling hundreds of millions of dollars" — what with the breakaway threat of Rene Levesque's separatism — in moving as many as a half dozen big federal departments out of Ottawa, Ontario and into Hull, Quebec.

He admits, too, that with the majority Trudeau Liberals pushing harder than ever, as the prime minister has said they will, for bilingualism, there will be some departments operating in French.

"And I think that's great," he has enthused.

Catch is that under Quebec's Bill 22, the federal departments in Hull will have to work in unilingual French regardless of Ottawa's bilingualism.

And this, smiles The Hon. Barney, "is something we're going to have to adapt to."

The way he sees it, English doesn't need protecting in the national capital, but French does.

Well, perhaps, except that Independent MP Leonard Jones of Moncton was ridiculed -- for ridicule it was — by both sides of the House for asking a question in English which Postmaster General Bryce Mackasey answered in French to general hee-haw applause.

The applauding MPs might be surprised to know how many taxpayers think the episode totally unfunny.

Nuclear jinx may hit Mr. Ford

By MARK MURRAY from Tokyo

The jinx that has so far stopped any U.S. president in office from visiting Japan may yet claim Gerald Ford as a victim. And even if he does come here he is likely to face a hostile reception—a fact that is causing Japanese security officials great concern.

The Ford visit, scheduled to begin on Nov. 18, has now run into the Japanese "nuclear allergy." Basically this is the same issue that persuaded President Dwight Eisenhower to cancel a Tokyo trip in 1960. Former President Richard Nixon was hoping to come to Japan this year, until his Watergate problems got out of hand. But when Gerald Ford took office everything finally seemed to be progressing smoothly towards a historic presidential visit. With the Vietnam war over, anti-Americanism in Japan was at a low ebb, the opposition parties were muted and security officials felt relatively confident for the safety of the president — the major consideration that had precluded such a visit.

Then an obscure retired U.S. admiral gave some unsworn testimony to a congressional committee hearing in Washington and anti-Americanism became respectable again. Retired Admiral Gene Laroque, who once commanded a flagship of the Seventh Fleet in the Pacific, set the wires humming between Tokyo and Washington with a statement that American warships could be expected to be carrying their nuclear armament whenever they called at foreign ports, including Japan.

The only problem with that was a long standing Japanese government understanding that U.S. warships were in fact "clean" when they called at ports here. This has been particularly the case since a number of ships have made the Japanese ports of Yokosuka and Sasebo their home bases.

This has been a sensitive issue ever since Japan and the U.S. signed their mutual security pact in 1960, an act which led to bloody riots, the resignation of the Japanese government and the cancellation of the Eisenhower visit.

The pact allows the U.S. to keep military bases in Japan, in return for which Japan in principle gets U.S. nuclear protection. The key section concerns an American promise to consult Tokyo before introducing any nuclear weapons to Japanese soil.

The Japanese, for their part, have indicated that any such request would be refused in view of the government's three non-nuclear principles—not to manufacture, possess or allow the introduction of nuclear weapons. That at least is the government's position for public consumption. Over the years the opposition and left-wing groups have sought to present evidence that American nuclear weapons are in fact being kept on Japanese soil. But in every case Washington has given assurances it is adhering to the prior consultation clause and this has been accepted by the Tokyo government.

The testimony by Admiral Laroque naturally confirmed opposition suspicions. The first question raised by the admiral's testimony is why it was ever made public. Obviously, someone slipped up, apparently forgetting the Japanese public's aversion to anything nuclear in view of the 1945 horrors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

But in some quarters a more sinister interpretation is placed on the release — that it is an American trial ballon, designed to prepare the public climate for the open introduction of U.S. nuclear weapons if these have to be withdrawn from South Korea because of political uncertainties there.

In Washington, the State Department has tried to smooth over the row by a statement reassuring Japan the prior consultation clause and promises made to various Japanese leaders are still operative. Outside the government, however, the reassurance has satisfied practically no one.

The two ports used by U.S. warships are demanding tougher government steps to ensure no nuclear arms are brought into the country. There is a growing body of opinion that believes Admiral Laroque's testimony is accurate, even though the State Department insists he was speaking as a civilian and therefore no weight should be attached to his words.

For one thing, there is the question of whether an American ship could unload its nuclear weapons at sea oh to, for instance, an "arms tanker." Would an aircraft carrier like the Midway, which is based at Yokosuka, really allow itself to be denuded of its nuclear punch when it might have to react to an emergency in a hurry? This is the question asked by some Japanese commentators.

Whatever the truth, however, it has vastly complicated President Ford's trip. The Socialist and Communist parties have both announced they oppose the presidential visit and will press the government to insist on its cancellation. Various left-wing groups are planning massive demonstrations. Various cities housing U.S. military bases are clamoring for their removal, or at least that of any component or facility which might be capable of handling nuclear weapons.

This was how things got out of hand in 1960. Unless the government can come up with a formula to cool the passions, the protests could be serious by the time Mr. Ford steps on to Japanese soil.

Government officials privately admit their concern for the safety of the president.

Most of the fanatical left wingers have been driven overseas — the Red Army extremists, for example — but there are still enough left at home to cause trouble.

Police are still making an exhaustive search to find the radicals responsible for the August bombing of a Tokyo office block in which eight people were killed and well over 200 hurt. The target was the headquarters of Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, apparently attacked for its involvement in armaments production. Security officials admit they would breathe a lot more easily if the bombers were safely behind bars before Nov. 18.

Disaster for the forces

By PAUL HELLYER

It has happened again. Defence Minister Richardson has announced a further reduction in the strength of the armed forces. The news has been greeted with consternation by officers and men alike. And well it might.

This is just the latest in a series of contractions going back to the mid-60s. At that time, any excess fat was carved away and each succeeding slice has been getting closer to the bone.

Present strength is below 80,000 and even that figure is too low for the variety of roles and tasks that have been assigned. Figures being discussed by government insiders would be disastrous. Not only would the number of tasks be sharply curtailed, it would be "game over" for the Canadian armed forces as a highly sophisticated and world respected professional force.

The suggestion that the reduction of personnel will free more money for equipment just doesn't hold water. It would if there were no inflation and if under those circumstances a permanent change in the balance between personnel and equipment expenditures were planned. But in today's highly inflationary situation, the government is just trying to make a virtue out of necessity.

To keep the forces at their present strength and to give them the equipment they badly need requires more money. Not more money in real terms but more of these increasingly worthless pieces of paper we call Canadian dollars. Without it, the results will be reductions in both personnel strength and equipment purchases.

Vast expenditures are required for new equipment. The aging Centurion tank should be replaced. A new long-range coastal patrol plane is long overdue. A new interceptor is required to replace the obsolescent Starfighter (CF-104) and air defence command's Voodoo (CF-101). Then the Freedom-Fighter (CF-5) can be phased into the training role in accordance with the plan at the time they were purchased. In addition, a plan should be adopted to lay down one keel a year so that the fleet can be replaced on a systematic rotation basis without violent swings in the level of expenditure.

At the present rate of inflation, if more money is not available, the forces will be reduced to impotence in four or five years.

Should the government allow this to happen, it will show that it has learned nothing from history. In the 1930s, the Tories decimated the forces. Now the Grits are doing the same.

No one likes to pay the bill for police and armed force protection but in a world of increasing crime and violence, both nationally and internationally, it is an insurance premium we have to pay.

In addition to the primary responsibility in matters of sovereignty, support of NATO, Arctic surveillance, peacekeeping and aid to the civil power in times of riot and insurrection, the armed forces provide many side benefits as well.

They train many of the pilots who fly our commercial airplanes. They train tradesmen of all sorts and thousands of high school dropouts have learned a trade and established themselves. They have been called into action to control floods and to help harvest crops.

In 1967, they helped save the forest industry in Labrador. The call came in the late afternoon on the eve of Canada's 100th birthday. By dawn, the advance party was in position and by early that morning men and equipment were available to help the gallant forest rangers fight the fire. Joey Smallwood credited the instant reaction of the armed forces with saving the forest industry.

Canadian servicemen are real professionals. They are among the best in the world. Their level of excellence takes years to acquire. To keep those skills and have them available in case of emergency, they will need the personnel and sophisticated equipment necessary as well as sufficient operating funds to provide adequate training.

Since the government can find the large amounts of money necessary to pay unemployment insurance in a period of rising unemployment, it can also find the money necessary to keep the armed forces operational if it wants to. Failure to do so will be a considerable disservice to Canada.

A little comedy

From the Winnipeg Free Press

Real Caouette has complained in the Commons that the CBC is copping out of its responsibilities by plastering us and the air with sport broadcasts. But maybe the CBC is merely acknowledging the natural emphasis of Canadian culture?

Another growing emphasis of this culture is vehicle theft. It has been given a special daily place on Information Radio.

The other day a man on a stolen motorcycle gave the police a TV series chase through the streets of Winnipeg and got himself caught by getting his motor bike — well, it wasn't really his — caught between two houses.

What this country needs is more good TV comedy. Is it not possible for the CBC to meet Mr. Caouette's criticism by getting mobile teams to cover events like this now and again, just now and again, to give us a hearty — little — laugh with the news?

Jealousy and parochialism involved in furor over Highlands

Regional plan attack ill-conceived, unjustified

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist Reporter

Few public outcries have been more ill-conceived and less justified than the current furor over the regional development plan.

And few controversies have shown with such clarity the jealousy and parochialism that motivates the attitudes of the Capital Region's municipalities and interest groups.

The regional plan's critics would have everyone believe that the Capital Region Board is bent on destroying the Highlands, reducing the property tax base of municipalities, and protecting a few vested business interests in Victoria's business core.

Ecology groups criticize the regional board for acknowledging an inevitable future growth of the population in the Capital Region. They are advocating an immediate "no-growth" policy.

Saanich is attacking the regional plan, because it promotes the Highlands, north of the city, as a logical place to house much of the anticipated population growth.

That would result in a slowdown of Saanich's expansion, reducing the anticipated revenue from property taxes.

Sidney and Central Saanich are voicing similar concerns, but they add their fear of losing autonomy to the regional board.

Perhaps the most understandable reaction to the regional plan comes from residents of the Highlands who fear the erosion of their way of life.

In support of their demands that the regional board should reconsider its proposal to use the Highlands as the region's future expansion grounds, Highland residents urge the preservation of that area for recreational purposes.

The regional board, however, is faced with stark realities, and can't afford to appease one small section of Greater Victoria's population to the detriment of all others.

The regional plan is based on one concept: growth, inevitable growth.

By the end of this century, Greater Victoria's population is expected to reach 375,000, an increase of about 70 per cent.

People will have to live somewhere. The provincial government's Agricultural Reserve Plan has eliminated the use of fertile land for housing.

Victoria, Esquimalt and Oak Bay have almost reached the limits of their potential expansion.

Saanich, Central Saanich, North Saanich and Sidney have much agricultural land and Saanich, particularly, is considered in danger of expanding along the lines of "urban sprawl," which is no longer considered desirable.

Saanich does have some growth potential, but the regional plan sets it much lower than Saanich council would like it to be.

That leaves the non-agricultural land for future housing, or for new self-sufficient communities. The Highlands are ideally suited to that purpose.

Whether Highland residents like it or not, much of their area must be used to absorb the growth during the next 20 to 30 years.

Rather than criticize the regional board for tackling the issue, Capital Region residents should be grateful that the future is planned with some care.

The alternative would have been to just let things happen, to cope with problems as they arise.

The regional board chose to design a detailed plan, eliminating to a great extent the element of chance.

For that, the regional board, particularly its chairman James Campbell, deserve a standing ovation.

Hit-or-miss methods—week after week

Hasty legislation becomes NDP habit

By JIM HUME
Colonist Staff

Times change and so, apparently, do the opinions of politicians.

When Attorney-General Alex Macdonald announced his partial ban on South African wines last week he did so with a fierce blast against the South African government. But we all remember, don't we, that a couple of years ago when Emery Barnes refused to open the Rothman's tennis tournament in Vancouver, because there were a couple of South Africans playing, who took his place.

That's right, it was dear old tennis-loving Alex Macdonald. Tennis, apparently, isn't worth a political stand, the South African grape is.

The wine boycott, stripped of its flowery language, is really typical of so many NDP stands during the past two years. Basically, it says "we won't put South African wines on our shelves, but if you want them we'll buy them for you." In other words a tough stand, maybe.

The waffle was the attorney-general's second of the week. Earlier, he had come through with another of those typical NDP turn-abouts in the face of stiffening criticism from landlords, tenants and his rentalsman Barrie Clark.

As I have said before in this space, our present government has a penchant for passing hasty legislation, discovering it won't work or creates more harm than good, and then agreeing to conduct "further studies" to come up with a formula which will work.

The landlord-tenant legislation is just another example of laws conceived without due thought, rammed through the Legislature by the hefty government majority, and now scheduled to go back to the drawing boards to eliminate problems which didn't exist until the legislation was placed on the books.

I hold no particular brief for landlords in their battles with the act and with militant tenant organizations. And I have never claimed to be an economist. But the 8-per-cent rent increase ceiling, in a year of spiralling costs, had to be ridiculous from the start. It sounded good, just as the wine ban sounds good at first reading, but it left, and leaves, a great deal to be desired as Macdonald is now finding out to his chagrin.

The attorney-general wasn't the only cabinet minister to raise eyebrows during the week. Joining him on the ducking stool was Education Minister Eileen Dailly with her announcement of 15 conciliators to try and settle teacher-trustee salary disputes throughout the province.

I'm not going to cry too much about the botched-up press release written by some incompetent flack because you get used to that sort of thing in the press gallery these days. Suffice to say that the epic statement left out more information than it contained.

Of greater significance was that none of the 15 conciliators named had been approached prior to the announcement to see if they would agree to take on the task. That little matter came to light with the embarrassing news that one of the 15, Louis Lindholm, had been in Europe for several weeks on an extended vacation and wouldn't be back in Victoria until the end of February.

Weakly, the education department blamed the labor department for submitting names without checking them out. And I say weakly justifiably because surely it was education's responsibility to take submitted names of likely conciliators and then make the approach to ascertain whether or not they would serve.

I suppose we could dismiss the silly little foul-up as a joke, but should we? Wasn't it rather just another case of an administration which after two years in office still can't administer?

Sure, it was only a small incident, but small incidents, when coupled with larger ones, convey to us a picture of a government not really in control of our destiny, or even its own.

When Premier Barrett returned from his drum-beating publicity trip around the province he said he was happy with the reception he received. I'm sure he was because glad-handing party followers greeted him at every stop and, as I feared, he believed what the faithful told him.

Looking back over his trip I'm prepared to bet that in all of the communities he visited he didn't leave many answers behind. Pleasant memories of a pleasant man, but few, if any, answers to local problems.

There's a reason for that, of course. The answers lie here, at home in Victoria, within the administration. And hardly a week goes by without that administration demonstrating again and again that it lacks the efficiency which was once an NDP trade mark.

Last week was no exception.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

In your opinion...

Elderly pensioners to be uprooted

Residents resent project

Alderman Sam Bawlf has given notice to the tenants of the 500 Pandora block (Zone M2) to pack up and leave by the end of this year. This area, on the south side of Pandora, which includes the apartments, has been designated by Mr. Bawlf to be renovated and turned into a downtown dome-covered open market square.

Whether this project will be an attraction to the sophisticated shopper, a gathering place for the restless young, a "Gastown" for the hippies, or a new shelter for the winos is anyone's guess.

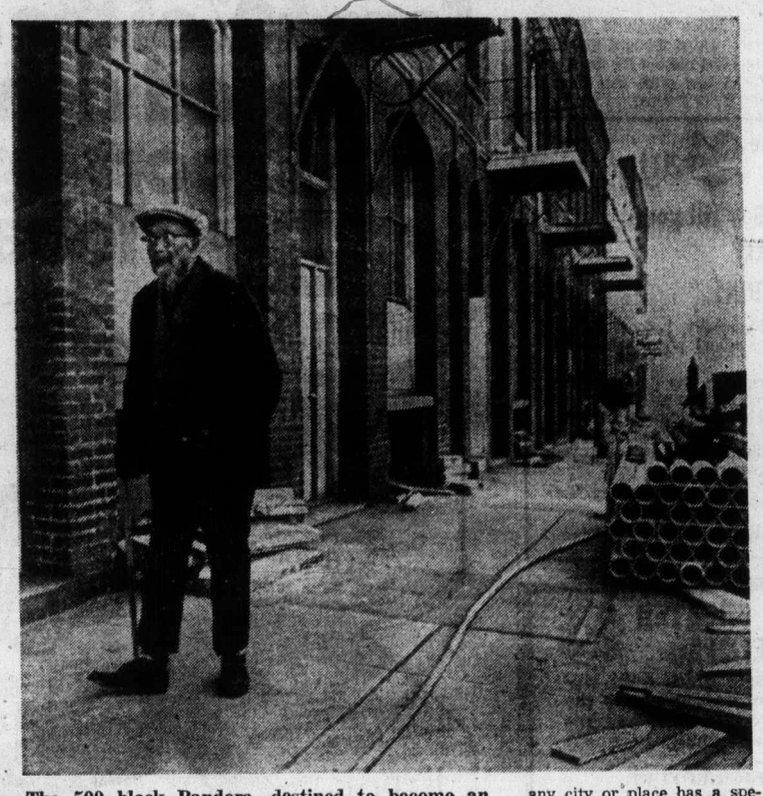
It might be just another half-successful venture like Bastion Square (where the merchants are already planning to move out due to lack of customers during off-tourist months, no profits and too high overhead costs.)

Or, on the other hand, it might turn out to be a very nice meeting place. Certainly this area will not be as blight-looking as it is now — for this people will thank you, Mr. Bawlf.

However, many of the people evicted are senior citizens living on pensions, who have lived here for 10, 20 or more years. They are of Oriental descent, most of whom have no relatives or wives to look after them in their old age.

There is usually just enough money each month to pay for rent and food, and with the high cost of living these days, they barely survive.

Despite this, they have made friends in the community who can speak their language and help them in a neighborly way when they are sick or troubled. They depend on each other.



The 500 block Pandora, destined to become an open market.

To be suddenly evicted and told to go somewhere else is like telling a child who has not yet learned to read and write to get lost, quite literally.

Many of these old people feel helpless and hopeless and rejected, with no place to go. It is sad to see an old man cry for sheer hopelessness and despair. No wonder they have a resentful deep feeling of being invaded by an interloper.

Any social-ethnic group in any city or place has a special sense of communion, just as your family or your ideal neighborhood has this sense too, although you may not be aware of it. The elderly people living in the 500 block Pandora have this sort of communion, and this is being torn apart in more affecting ways than one.

SYMPATHIZER.

Apology demanded

On behalf of all the people of Victoria and district that have relations and friends living on the Prairies, I demand that Gorde Hunter be made to issue a public apology immediately.

His article this morning (Colonist, Oct. 24 — page 2) is in bad taste and does not deserve to be in the paper.

A. ADAMS,
1121 Pandora Avenue,
Victoria, B.C.

● Gorde Hunter — whose views, incidentally, are entirely his own — will be returning to the subject of the Prairies in a column this week.—Ed.

Please say it in English

In Letters to the Editor (Colonist, Oct. 20 — Page 5) I noticed the letter written by Mrs. Harold Venske on the subject of the corruption of the English language.

We have not only the word "ain't" and the use of "me" where "I" should be used, there are many others such as the word "at" in the expression "where it's at."

We have many words of other languages, especially French, which are in common use by the English-speaking, who do not seem to know that their own language has all the words necessary to cover any subject, such as: Regime, detente, communique, montage, resume, rationale, finale, debut, debutted, premiere, cuisine, technique, locale, moulage, cartel, materielle, suite, rapport, liaison, dossier, touche, boutique, entourage, entrepreneurs, and many others.

The English equivalents are just as well-sounding and mean just as much, and are supposed to be used by English-speaking people. English is their language and they should look after it and protect it as they do their homes and themselves.

For example, on the very first page of the small booklet: The Trade Practices Act and You, by the Honorable Phyllis Young, we find these words: ". . . information contained in this brochure."

What is wrong with folder, leaflet, booklet, pamphlet, and so on?

Grammar not accent

In my recent letter (Colonist, Oct. 20 — page 5) regarding the English language, I was not directing my comments to the people who, through no fault of their own, do not speak correct English, such as those who have not been taught properly and those from another country.

What I do object to is teachers and those who know better accepting substandard values, or the abolition of rules, which could lead to no rules of any kind, and chaos.

My English is far from perfect, but I do not expect others to accept my errors as correct. I expect them to accept me no matter how I speak, as I do others.

But I don't have to accept lowered standards by those who are in a position to set the standards. (Of course in both letters I am talking about grammar, not accent.)

In other words, I am not against speaking correct English (grammar), but am against accepting it as "correct."

Savings Bonds earn less than their value!

Does it strike anyone else as odd that the federal government should be spending hundreds of thousands of taxpayers' dollars to promote the latest issue of 9¾ per cent Canada Savings Bonds?

While such bonds are presumably as safe as the nation itself, the interest offered is in fact less than the current rate of inflation. In other words, in terms of buying power, the bond holder winds up at year's end with less than he had when he started.

Would it not make more sense for John Turner to offer us a bond with a built-in cost-of-living adjustment?

In the meantime, we are paying through the snout for an advertising campaign which is telling us less than the whole truth.

P-M

let your equipment maintenance be OUR PROBLEM

Equipment breakdowns are even more costly with today's rising costs. Having your machine inspected by our P-M specialists on a regular basis can help reduce costly downtime and repairs. A close examination of your entire fuel system, lubrication system, engine and transmission — can often reveal minor adjustments, which, if made now, might prevent unexpected failures later. Finning's P-M Preventive Maintenance is such a program.

Our P-M specialists become thoroughly familiar with your equipment. They know its history and the job conditions under which it has worked. This knowledge and expertise in servicing Caterpillar equipment is reflected in the complete report you receive after each visit.

You pay a low, flat rate fee, plus travel time and mileage, for the regular P-M. Repair labour, materials, overtime are additional charges.

This cost is small, particularly when you consider all the benefits. With P-M you know the true condition of your machines. You can evaluate the effectiveness of your routine maintenance. You can forecast and budget for repairs or replacement. And you can repair minor problems before they become major expenses.

Give your Finning parts and service sales representative a call for full details on money-saving Preventive Maintenance.

'They're just animals'

TORONTO (CP) — The Star quotes a former Toronto policeman as saying he stood by and watched police beatings during his seven years on the force, occasionally taking part himself.

In a copyright story, the newspaper quotes Bob Wood, 27, as saying he left the force last August, partly because of increasing violence on the part of the police.

"There was more unnecessary physical violence inflicted by policeman," the newspaper quotes him as saying. "The poor befuddled policeman doesn't know what we want from him any more, so sometimes he lashes out."

The story quotes Wood as saying he watched and took part in beatings, but denied knowledge of police use of torture devices.

"There is brutality for brutality's sake going on, but no more than in other police forces," Wood is quoted as saying.

The Star said Wood talked of police disenchantment, saying police began to feel ineffective and thought the public had lost respect for the force.

"A few guys that beat up people regularly would justify it by saying: 'They're just animals. They deserve what they get,'" the story quotes Wood as saying.

The interview quotes the former policeman as saying he sometimes used handcuffs to subdue prisoners.

"I would tighten the cuffs on their wrists until it really hurt."

"Sometimes I would make them put their hands on the floor and I would jump on the cuffs to tighten them once more . . . It hurt — but the marks were gone in a couple of hours."

Wood is quoted as saying rookie policemen could do nothing to stop the beatings.

He is quoted as saying he saw people bounced off walls, although he never saw an innocent person who was not causing trouble attacked by a police officer.

He is quoted as saying police felt frustrated by red tape and department pettiness.

The interview quotes Wood as being strongly opposed to the Bail Reform Act, saying: "Policemen had to start proving that a guy should be in jail, instead of a guy who was often a known criminal proving he was fit to be let out."

Dog's life in service isn't really that ruff

CHICAGO (UPI) — The defence department put out a howl Saturday for German shepherd dogs, promising owners up to $150 and the dogs a good life with lots of chewy bones.

For dogs who weigh a minimum of 60 pounds, measure at least 23 inches high at the shoulders and are between one and three years of age a life of adventure is available in the army, navy, air force, marine corps or the U.S. customs, according to Lt.-Col. William Steele.

Steele, an air force command pilot who heads the defence department's dog centre in San Antonio, Tex., said qualifying German shepherds will be trained in eight categories such as patrol dogs, narcotics sniffers, explosive sniffers and sentry dogs "for all the services."

"We know there are hundreds of owners who are having trouble with their German shepherds.

"We are seeking those people whose child is allergic to the dog or who have a landlord who wants them to get rid of the dog," Steele said.

"The dogs are well cared for and we don't have any dropouts. If a dog fails one course, he is retrained or trained in another."

Steele said "shepherds are the second most numerous breed in the country," and easily trainable.

Besides age, weight, and height requirements, female recruits must not have had puppies and must have been spayed at least 30 days before reporting for their physical.

"We will pay up to $150 for qualified dogs," Steele said.

Interested dogs may apply in person Saturday, Sunday and Monday at Fort Sheridan, north of Chicago, or write the department of defence dog centre, San Antonio, Texas, to find out how enlistment may be accomplished by mail. Candidates do not need to be registered or purebred, but must look and act like a German shepherd.

B.C. boy snaps picture of UFO

SURREY (CP) — An 11-year-old Surrey boy has taken a picture of what he is convinced is an unidentified flying object.

"It just went round and round in a circle, up and down and then took off super fast in the sky," David Knutsen said Saturday.

He saw the object Oct. 15 from the kitchen window of his home in this Vancouver suburb after he noticed two RCMP officers standing in a parking lot, pointing in the sky toward the east.

The picture shows a circular, almost black object with a sharp but narrow glow around its exterior.

Sergeant Arnold McPherson of the RCMP said Saturday he didn't know the names of the officers David said he saw and no UFO reports were filed with the police station.

A blazing white UFO, described as roaring like a jet aircraft, was reported by an RCMP officer in Turner Valley, Alta., two days before David took the picture, which was just developed this week.

They'll quit smoking

MARSHFIELD, Wis. — The Wood County municipal emergency director has promised his group won't use smoke anymore at mock disaster exercises — if there is a next time.

Donald Sleeter, 48, spoke from his hospital bed.

He and 25 others were treated for smoke inhalation after two smoke bombs set off to create "an appropriate atmosphere" overdid things during an emergency government exercise to simulate a nursing home or hospital where an explosion had occurred.

Sleeter, Ted Mendt, 30, and Robert Lowe, 25, remained in hospital. All were in good condition.

The smoke bombs were set off outside the building, but a wind stopped and the smoke filled the building. Fire chief Verlyn Ziegahn said the smoke was so thick "you almost had to feel your way" around the building.

Sixteen of those treated were "mock" victims. Two were firemen and five were policemen participating in the xercise.

Court aid 'unpaid' since last August

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — A court recorder says the British Columbia government wages.

Karen Best said she began work as a temporary employee of the attorney-general's department on Aug. 1 at $24.83 a day, but has yet to receive payment, even though Provincial Court Judge Gilbert Hogg has asked government officials to intervene.

Miss Best said she has complained several times and was told by regional court reporter Bob Mummery of Prince George that her job had been wrongly advertised.

"Then he told me how to write the letters applying for the permanent position and said I would be getting paid on Friday. But no money arrived," she said in an interview.

Judge Hogg, an assistant deputy attorney-general in the 1950s, said in an interview Friday that another court recorder in Smithers, B.C., has not been paid since she started work more than a month ago.

Carriers create hazard on bridge

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The navy and its big carriers have the directors of the Golden Gate Bridge fighting mad.

It seems the carriers always pass under the span during commuter hours, and this causes traffic jams along with many minor accidents and emotional upset for motorists.

Drivers slow to get a peek at the vessels.

Bridge district general manager Dale Luehring has repeatedly asked the navy to change the scheduling of the carriers' arrival and departure.

"Each time we think we have an agreement with them, we find we don't," the exasperated Luehring said Friday.

The directors voted to authorize the general manager to go to the navy's No. 1 man — the secretary of the navy.

How did the navy react to the director's decision?

"The matter is under advisement," a 12th naval district spokesman said.

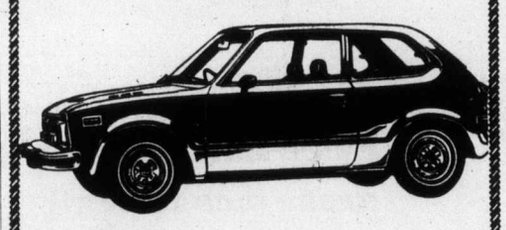
CIVIC



Here's what the car experts have to say about the Honda Civic:

"Honda Civic was chosen 'Car of the Year' by an overwhelming majority of our voters. Its bright design and practicality give it the potential to be a world-wide people's car. Its function and economy make it a masterpiece of its kind."
Motor Fan (Japan's leading car magazine)

"The Civic's acceleration is more than a match for that of competing 1200 cc sedans, and a few with larger engines as well; 1200 cc in the Civic feels more like the 1600 cc of, say the Datsun 510 or the Toyota Corolla (1600 cc)."
Road and Track — May, 1973

"Many makes talk about small on the outside, big on the inside, but Honda has done it."
Road and Track — May 1973

"The suspension is surprisingly sophisticated for such a tiny package — fully independent on all wheels. All use the McPherson strut principle . . . and lower swinging A-arms. The result is an exceptionally smooth ride for such a small car."
Motor Trend — April, 1973

"How does it go? What's the Japanese word for dynamite?"

Strike abortion laws—study

OTTAWA (CP) — A majority of doctors believe federal abortion laws should be stricken from the books, leaving therapeutic abortion decisions up to patient and doctor, suggests a study published in the current issue of The Canadian Journal of Public Health.

The study, which also finds most doctors agreeing that social and economic factors are grounds for abortion, is based on a survey of 167 general practitioners, obstetricians and gynecologists with hospital privileges at any of Ottawa's five public general hospitals.

The federal position, staunchly supported by Justice Minister Otto Lang and spelled out under Section 251 of the Criminal Code, is that abortion is a crime unless approved by a hospital abortion committee to save a woman's life or health.

However, many if not most of the therapeutic abortions performed in Canada are on social or mental grounds, which federal laws imply are valid under a broad definition of health.

The study, prepared by Murray Diner, administrator of an Ottawa nursing home, also found a majority of the doctors believed that abortions could be performed successfully at facilities other than hospitals.

The Criminal Code says abortions can be performed only at accredited or approved hospitals.

A majority of the doctors also disagreed with another aspect of the legislation. They said no publicly-funded hospital has the right to prohibit an abortion on moral or religious grounds, whereas the law gives any hospital this right.

Religious convictions and type of medical practice influence a physician's opinions about abortion, the study found.

To lose weight enter hospital and fast—MD

STANFORD, Calif. (UPI) — The best way to lose excess weight and remain happy is to enter a hospitaal and fast for a short time, says a Stanford University psychiatrist.

Dr. Albert Stunkard, chairman of the department of psychiatry and behavioral sciences, said short-term fasting in a hospital environment "causes less stress to patients than programs in which there is severe caloric restriction."

Stunkard's conclusion was contained in an article he wrote with Dr. John Rush, a University of Pennsylvania psychiatrist in the October issue of the Annals of Internal Medicine.

The doctors said there were three major treatments for patients treated in hospital for obesity: short-term fasts lasting no longer than two weeks, low calorie diets and long-term fasts which might last 40 days.

"For fasting from 10 to 40 days there was a dramatic rise in emotional disturbance," Stunkard said.

In one study, he said, patients "showed definite mood fluctuations of marked degree," increased aggression and even "near-psychotic episodes."

The psychiatrist said low-calorie diets caused the same degree of emotional upsets as long-term fasting.

"These might be the critical values," Stunkard said. "They suggest that the disturbances might, in part at least, be precipitated by metabolic changes which doubtless occur in long-term fasting."

The doctor also said those who became overweight in childhood were more difficult to treat and had more emotional difficulties than those who became fat in adult life.

EATON'S NEEDLECRAFT FAIR

Eaton's Third Floor

How do you do it?
Ask our experts,
see great displays.
All starts Monday.

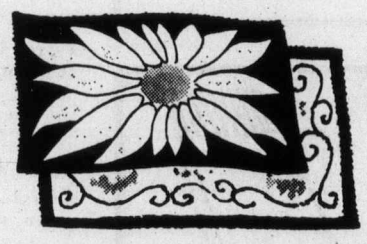
Whatever you want to know—we've brought in the people who can tell you! And show you! See exciting displays Find out what's new in crafts, stitchery . . . even "trade secrets." 5 days of great how-to-do-it ideas and shows at Eaton's. Don't miss it!

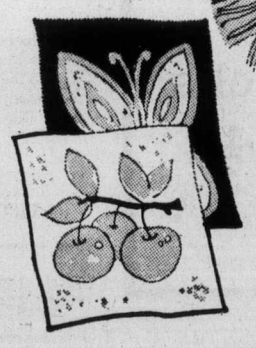
Knit news! Check Paton's and Baldwin's display — Mrs. Evans shows you the ins and outs of knitting, crocheting for this year's great fashion looks! Don Carmichael, Paton and Baldwin's representative, will also be in attendance.

Crewel Charms! Do a wall picture, cushion covers. Meet Dorita Grant in Paragon's booth. Marshall Hall, Paragon's representative, will also be in attendance.

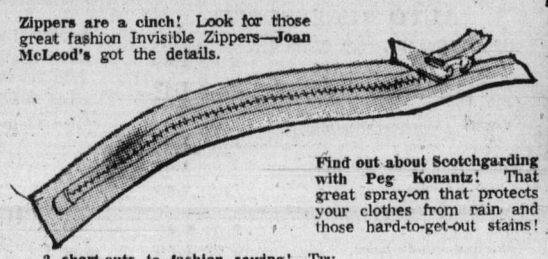


Everything you've always wanted to know about rugs—but didn't know who to ask! Have your questions answered in our Bernat Yarn Booth.

Find out how to maye beautiful lace doilies, all kinds of "heirlooms" from crochet cotton. Sharon McBain shows you how at our J & P Coats display.



Take up needlepoint! And start with an expert like Agnes Nicol—she makes it easy—at our Belding Corticelli booth. Frank Baird sales manager and Al Newton, representative, will also be in attendance.



Zippers are a cinch! Look for those great fashion Invisible Zippers—Joan McLeod's got the details.

Find out about Scotchgarding with Peg Konantz! That great spray-on that protects your clothes from rain and those hard-to-get-out stains!

2 short-cuts to fashion sewing! Try Aunt Mary's Electric scissors and tailor markers. They make the big difference!

These stitchery kits make it easy! Here's everything you need: 100% wool, yarn, needles, instructions. And pick from

Spring Flowers, about 18x40",	18.99
Church in the Wildwood, about 16x20",	10.99
Waking Willow, about 18x22",	10.99

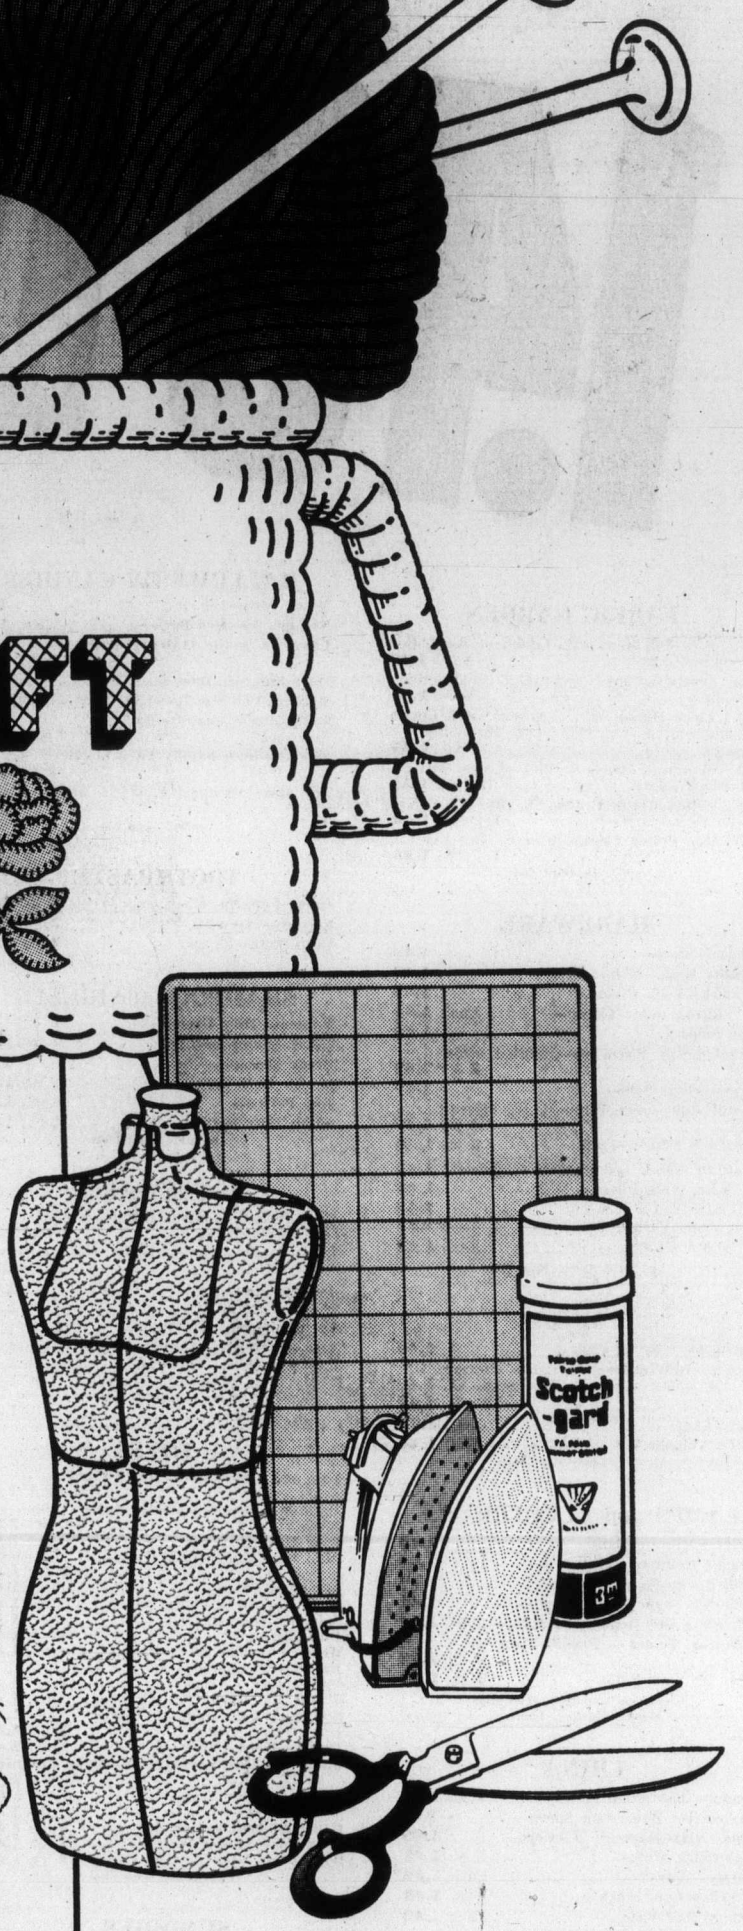
Wall rugs are in!

Floor to-wall—that's what the modern decorator magazines are doing. And it's easy with our kit—you get patterned canvas, all the yarn you need and directions. Striking floral design features reds, mauve on cream background. (Latch-hook and binding not included.) 35.99

3 easy afghans in kit

Knit 2, crochet 1. Kit comes with 3 patterns and enough yarn to complete one afghan design. Knit up "zigzag" about 44x56" or lacey-look about 48x54". Crochet design about 40x60". (Needle is extra.) 12.99



Have you got iron-all?

You should have—it really helps! Iron-all pressing attachment snaps on to your iron. Lets you iron all fabrics at the same temperature without a pressing cloth. Great for velvet, corduroy, or crepes. Stops scorching and melting. 3.99

Acme Dressform adjusts

And you get a perfect fit. You can adjust form at neck, shoulders, bust, waist, hip and for height. Durable paper mache construction on metal stand. Cotton jersey cover and instructions. 39.99

Model	Bust	Waist	Hip
A	32-34	25-32	35-48
B	36-44	29-36	39-99

Handy Cutting Board

Heavy laminated kraftboard marked with 1" squares and bias line. Surface opens to 40x72" for cutting; folds flat to 13x40" for storage. Tape-bound edges. 4.49

CLC rescinds boycott on Goodyear products

The Canadian Labor Congress' call for a nationwide boycott of Goodyear tires and rubber products has been rescinded, a spokesman for the International Association of Machinists, Local 219, said Saturday.

The strike at the company's plants at Etobicoke and Bowmanville, Ont., ended Wednesday, Hugh Weydert, business agent for the local, said.

Weydert said the settlement of the six-month strikes automatically cancelled the CLC call for a boycott of the company's products and retail outlets.

The CLC executive committee had called for the boycott at its monthly meeting in September, asking the 1.9 million trade unionists affiliated with the congress to "refrain from buying Firestone and Goodyear products and to stay away from retail outlets operated by these companies."

Workers at the Firestone plant in Hamilton, Ont., have been on strike since Feb. 28.

In Victoria, Firestone operates a retail outlet store at 2882 Douglas and a wholesale store at 833 Fisgard.

The CLC-sponsored boycott of those stores is still in effect.

Earlier reports that Victoria Tire Ltd., 610 Herald, was a Goodyear retail store were erroneous, Weydert added Saturday.

He said while the company does sell Goodyear products, it is owned locally and has a "very good record in the labor relations field."

Slim chance

Helping ex-convicts is driving one under

By STEPHEN BREWER
Colonist Reporter

A Victoria service designed to help men just released from prison adjust to life outside a cell is in danger of becoming extinct because no one, including the provincial government, seems willing to help finance it.

Chance, a service designed to cut bureaucratic red tape for ex-prisoners during their initial re-adjustment period, may be forced to close its doors before the year ends, the service's founder said Tuesday.

"I've been running this service with no funding at all since Aug. 15," said Lee Harwood, a 27-year-old who has been in and out of prisons since he was 16.

Wife pays bills

"Right now my wife, who's a nurse, pays all the bills.

"That's depressing for her, and for me . . . I've had to start thinking very seriously about closing up shop,"

"Shop" is the basement suite in Harwood's James Bay home, where he runs Chance out of a single desk, equipped with only a telephone, portable typewriter and a small selection of reference works.

Harwood has applied for a grant from the provincial government to help keep Chance alive.

Budget estimate

He estimates a yearly budget of less than $57,000 would do just that. Slightly more than half of that total would go toward salaries for a co-ordinator, a secretary and two street workers.

The rest would go toward rent for a house, utilities payments and funds to assist the ex-prisoners.

But is the service worth $57,000 a year?

Harwood believes it is, because it does something no other agency does: It assists an ex-prisoner in dealing informally with existing formal aid agencies.

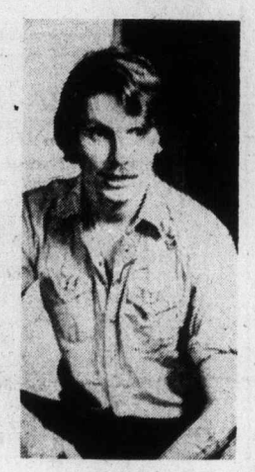
It means a lot

That may not sound like much but to the men being released from British Columbia's jails every day, it can mean a lot.

Almost anyone connected with the prison system, including the men behind bars, agrees an ex-convict either makes it or breaks it in the first 90 days after he is set free, Harwood said.

During that time, the ex-convict either adjusts successfully to society or he begins, again, to commit crimes which will, sooner or later, land him in prison.

During those 90 days, an ex-convict has three very real needs, Harwood said, and, in many cases, no way to satisfy them.



Harwood
. . . needs grant

Needs are simple

The needs are simple. The newly-released prisoner must find food, shelter and clothing.

Getting them isn't always easy.

A man released from prison on a Friday afternoon, as an extreme example, can find himself with little or no money in the pockets of the only set of clothing he owns

If he has the misfortune to arrive in Victoria after goverenmet offices have closed, he is faced with shifting for himself for the weekend.

If he can make it through the weekend, he is often faced with frustrating bureaucratic delays in processing the paperwork necessary for him to receive welfare, unemployment insurance or some other form of assistance.

Counselling given

All the while, of course, he has no place to stay (except an expensive hotel room), no food (except what he buys in restaurants), and no one to turn to — except the criminal element.

And Chance.

At Chance, an ex-inmate is offered a bed, meals and, if he needs it, whatever clothing Harwood can scrounge.

He is also offered counselling.

The counselling has little to do with social work, as it is classically defined.

Harwood has contacts with almost every agency in the area which can help an ex-convict, from the John Howard Society to the provincial human resources department.

Search for job

After talking with a man, Harwood begins shifting through the lists he maintains in an effort to determine which group, or groups, may be best equipped to help the individual.

A search for a job begins, with Harwood helping the ex-prisoner overcome the stigma of being an "ex-convict" and helping him find a job he will enjoy and, therefore, stick with.

The search for a place to live begins, too.

But in everything Chance does, there is little or no pressure to take the first thing that comes along.

There is little point in pressuring a man into taking a job he detests simply because it's the first one offered to him.

Repeating cycle

Eventually, he will walk away from it, bitter and angry at having been coerced into taking it in the first place.

If he has nothing to walk to, he will, more often than not, return to whatever he was doing which landed him in prison in the first place.

When he gets caught at it, he will go back to prison.

And the cycle will repeat itself until the time when that man walks through the gates of the prison and finds someone waiting who is willing to regard him as a human being, with individual wants and needs, and who is willing to give him a chance to fulfill those wants and needs.

Right now, Chance is trying to give him that chance.

Unless Lee Harwood gets some money to live on, he can't try much longer.

Adamson checks seedless English cucumbers

Bigger and better

Produce grown without soil

By GRANIA LITWIN
Colonist Reporter

Thousands of people across Vancouver Island grow tomatoes in their back gardens.

And hundreds of them annually contact the Federal Research Station, 8801 East Saanich, to find why tomatoes in window-boxes, back garden plots and small greenhouses have shrunk in size year by year or grown bumps.

For 12 years, the experimental farm has studied tomato-growing, partly to aid the home gardener and partly to help greenhouse owners on the island.

The study has found, for example, that greenhouse soil becomes "tired and dirty," and that many processes for keeping plants in top form are both laborious and expensive.

The 12-year study has been an experiment in the soil-less culture of commercial greenhouse tomatoes, trickle watering and liquid feeding systems — in other words, growing tomatoes in sawdust rather than soil and feeding tomatoes almost intravenously through rubber tubes lodged above their root systems.

Tubes drip controlled doses of nitrogen, calcium, magnesium, iron, copper and water on the roots along with other elements from a complete nutrient solution in a central greenhouse container.

Robert Adamson, research scientist at the station, who has been working on the study since it began, found that tomato plants grown this way show a dramatic increase in production.

The amount of sawdust needed to grow a tomato plant is much less than the soil required for the same plant because all the nutrients and minerals are added in liquid form. This means less work in caring for the plant. And it can be fed more exactly since doses of nutrients can be increased at crucial times when the plant bears fruit or produces flowers.

Adamson is conducting similar experiments with seedless "English" cucumbers. These cucumbers, he said, will probably replace shorter cucumbers which have seeds and are most common in the area.

He is also experimenting with smaller amounts of sawdust in the plastic bag at the plant's roots to reduce the cost. Along with this, a chemical called ethephen is being tested which accelerates maturing.

'Despite defection, Tories alive'

It's "tough luck" for anyone who thinks Saanich MLA Hugh Curtis' defection to Social Credit has killed the Conservative party in B.C., Tory leader Scott Wallace said Saturday.

He is "more determined than ever" to build the party, he added.

And he certainly does not agree with Curtis that Social Credit is the only answer to the NDP. In fact, Wallace criticized Curtis for having "no positive reasons for joining Social Credit other than to defeat the NDP."

Curtis' own "rather anemic endorsement . . . damned the Socreds with faint praise," Wallace said.

"Although the people are dissatisfied with the NDP, they are not persuaded that Social Credit is the answer," he said, adding that the power structure and people within the Socred party are the same as those defeated in 1972.

Wallace said his party's annual meeting in Kamloops next month would have "a positive approach and offer the province a clear-cut alternative."

Although Wallace thinks the Conservative party will grow, he is convinced the unity movement is dead.

"Bennett dealt the movement a mortal blow with his rigid opposition and it was finally killed by the move of Hugh Curtis," he said.

Curtis joined the Socreds Friday, saying he had chosen the only viable alternative to the NDP.

He left the Liberals for the Tories when he first ran for the Legislature in 1972. When asked about his party hopping, Curtis replied: "Well, I guess I'm a tourist."

Pollen one of group after ferry

By JIM BRAHAN
Colonist Reporter

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen is one of the 11 Victoria, Vancouver and Seattle businessmen who are trying to buy the former Canadian Pacific ferry Princess Marguerite.

Pollen said Saturday he hoped other city businessmen will join him and his associates in their attempt to re-start the Victoria-Seattle ferry service using the Marguerite.

Canadian Pacific announced last month that it was discontinuing the service because it had lost money over the past few years. The Marguerite, a 25-year-old vessel that carried 1,900 passengers, has been put up for sale through Maple Shipping, a Vancouver shipbroker.

The group trying to buy the Marguerite has formed Sea-Vic Inc., a company registered in Bellevue, Wash., but Pollen said the intention is to keep the ship under Canadian registry and its home port would continue to be Victoria.

Pollen declined to name his associates or say what price they are offering for the ship.

He did say a great deal of the success of their venture will depend on Sea-Vic's president, Capt. Ron Mullins of Seattle.

"He is the man who has the expertise in this business," Pollen added. Mullins is marine manager with West Tours of Seattle.

Mullins said in an interview from Seattle that if the company is successful in its bid to buy the 6,000-ton Marguerite it will be one of the last Canadian-manned passenger ships to operate on this coast.

"We are not interested in changing its registry nor do we intend to hire foreign crewmen," he said.

Mullins also declined to name the members of the firm but said there are five from Victoria, three from Seattle, and three from Vancouver.

Victoria Chamber of Commerce manager Brian Small earlier estimated the ship brought a tourist trade worth between $4 million and $5 million each summer to Victoria when it brought about 100,000 passengers here between May 15 and Sept. 30.

Another source pointed out the Marguerite's purchase of supplies from Victoria firms also was a good source of income for local merchants. Supplies included a continuous stock of about 8,000 rolls of various sized photographic films, 10-tons of groceries, and a weekly supply of about 3,000 pounds of meat.

Alan Sears, chartering manager for Maple Shipping, said negotiations for the purchase of the ship by Sea-Vic Inc. should be completed by Nov. 11.

Singers on today

NANAIMO — Victoria's Amity Singers, Vancouver Island's only professional choir, is in Nanaimo today, to present a concert in St. Andrew's United Church at 2 p.m., under the auspices of the arts and lectures and the music departments of Malaspina College.

Education lecture topic

J. R. Fleming, deputy education minister, will speak at the University of Victoria Monday night in the third of a series of 10 lectures given by the UVic extension program.

The lecture entitled Whither Education in British Columbia? will be held in room 168 of the Elliott building at 8:15 p.m.

Community board election set

A public meeting will be held for residents of Colwood, Langford and Metchosin at 8 p.m. Monday to elect a community resource board.

The meeting in Belmont-Fisher high school gym will elect a group which will tackle community problems and supply information on existing services, according to Alice Klyne, 3408 Metchosin.

The board will work on such problems as lack of recreation facilities and transportation.

Inn to get imposed contract

The provincial Labor Relations Board will impose a contract on the management and employees of the Mediaeval Inn because the two parties could not agree on a first contract.

The imposed contract comes after months of dispute at the restaurant at 1005 Broad, Victoria, where about 20 employees have been certified as members of the Beverage Dispensers and Culinary Workers Union.

Six weeks ago, the board told both sides in the dispute to settle by this week, or face the imposition of the contract.

There was a tentative agreement on wages, the chief stumbling block in negotiations, but management and union could not agree on when pay raises should become effective, a spokesman said.

The board has not indicated how long it expects to take in drafting the contract.

3 more trustee hopefuls

A doctor, nurse and former school principal are the latest candidates nominated to run for a seat on Greater Victoria School Board.

They are:

Dr. ark Fisher, 2710 Hibbens Close, Oak Bay, a family doctor.

Roy Temple, 1007 Joan Crescent, former Esquimalt high school principal, who retired in 1973.

Joyce Heynsbrook, 1448 Vining, a nurse and former aldermanic candidates in Victoria.

Other candidates in the Nov. 16 election are Jack Bradbury, a technician with the federal environment department, and Susan Brice, a housewife and former elementary school teacher.

One to One tutorial program is ideal

By BILL LEVER
Colonist Reporter

In theory at least, Victoria's "One to One" tutorial program may well be the most ideal education system ever devised.

It offers instruction to anyone who wants it, it doesn't cost anybody a cent, it has no need for politicians or bureaucrats, and it has a pupil-teacher ratio of 1:1.

The voluntary program, started a year ago by teacher Ron Spence, has brought together some 125 students and tutors who for various reasons don't fit into traditional institutiins.

"One to One" is again looking for both students and teachers, Spence said, and the student can study any subject provided a teacher is available.

Spence and co-workers keep lists of people wanting help and of people willing to teach. After the initial hookup, teacher and student are left to choose their own time and place of instruction.

This service has been used by several categories of students, including:

- Secondary school students with specific educational needs.
- Correspondence students and people upgrading for their jobs.
- New Canadians with language difficulties.
- People preparing for high school equivalency exams.
- Native Indians from areas where formal education has been limited.

Spence said the program's individual instruction has not only "assisted people in the learning process, it has encouraged marginal students to continue and complete their course work."

"It has also benefited people unable to fit into existing educational agencies, giving them the opportunity to work on independent studies."

Tutors in the program, all unpaid, are retired school teachers, student and practising teachers or lay teachers.

For the retired teacher, Spence said, "One to One" offers social contact and activity as well as the "ideal condition" of teaching students who want to learn.

Benefits for the student teacher include the opportunity to gain experience and to "recognize the needs of individuals as well as a class."

Spence added that the program is also valuable to the non-professional teacher who may be considering teaching as a career and to the person who simply wants to teach a subject he is interested in.

Anyone interested in the program is invited to contact Spence at 383-6709.

Consumer grocery spending

Middlemen take big cash bite

WASHINGTON (AP) — The middlemen who process and sell food after it leaves the farm took a record bite from consumer grocery spending last month, the U.S. agriculture department says.

In September, the retail cost of a year's supply of farm-produced food items jumped $25 to a record annual rate of $1,776 for a typical household.

The Ford administration plans a meeting this week to see whether something can be done to trim middleman costs for food between the farmer and consumer. President Ford has said food prices are his top priority in combatting inflation.

The agriculture department figures showed that all of the 1.4-per-cent increase during September was due to a larger share going to middlemen. Of the total market-basket cost, farmers received $723 as their share on an annual basis, while middlemen received a record rate of $1,053.

The farm share was down $8 from August while the middleman portion was up $33 during the month, said department officials.

In his Oct. 8 economic message to Congress, Ford said he has directed his new Council on Wage and Price Stability "to find and expose all restrictive practices" which contribute to rising food costs.

The meeting next week was announced Friday by Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz. It was described as an "inquiry into margins and barriers" involved in the U.S. food supply.

The conference is scheduled for Thursday and Friday and will be sponsored jointly by the agriculture department and Ford's new council. Consumers, labor, farmers and others are expected to participate in the public meeting, a White House source said.

In other economic news, the U.S. says it is trimming its purchases of expensive imported oil, but inflated prices still are taking a big bite out of the U.S. balance of payments.

The U.S. trade deficit of $233 million reported Friday by the commerce department for the month of September was the fifth deficit in a row. But smaller purchases of overseas oil, food and automobiles helped the U.S. climb partially out of the record $1.1-billion hole it fell into in August

The volume of imported oil during September was down by 9.5 per cent from the same month a year ago. It was the second month in a row that imports have run behind a year earlier. So far in 1974, the United States has purchased 55.2 million fewer barrels, or 3.3 per cent less than during the same period on 1973.

The decline gave the administration a head start on its aim of reducing U.S. dependence on foreign oil. Ford has proposed voluntary conservation to trim by one million barrels the 16 million or 17 million barrels a day the U.S. now consumes.

Despite the decrease in oil imports, the cost of that oil for only nine months this year already is 130 per cent ahead of all of last year.

One, long ribbon of wood

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A machine that can produce one endless ribbon of particlewood as wide as 16 feet is being developed at Michigan Technological University.

James Hamilton of the university's Wood Research Institute said that, within the year, the machine will be ready for demonstration to industry.

Particlewood is made by reconstituting wood products and meshing them together into boards.

The inventor, a New Hampshire expert on wood reconstitution whom Hamilton declined to identify, has a patent pending.

Hamilton said the press is unique in that it can turn out a continuous "ribbon" of wood. All the other machines can turn out only a limited variety of specific lengths that might not match exactly what a customer needs.

With the new machine, he said, "you'd have a continuous ribbon of board you could cut to a specific size."

PWA deal aftermath

Lougheed's new rival avid free-enterpriser

By ALAN ARBUCKLE

CALGARY (CP) — When Art Smith, president of International Jet Air, helped Peter Lougheed get elected premier, he never expected to end up competing with the Progressive Conservative leader.

But that's the way it turned out when the Alberta government bought Pacific Western Airlines (PWA) this summer and Smith, 55, says it's enough to make him think of going back into politics.

"I happen to be an ardent free enterpriser, in fact I'm beginning to wonder if I am a member of a dying breed," he said in an interview.

"I think the only thing that would bring me back into politics is if I could be convinced that there was an opportunity to represent private initiative and the private sector . . . .

"If we destroy the individual or corporate initiative to do things for ourselves, we'll end up as a nation that makes a living collecting taxes from one another. I think it's that serious."

Smith served two terms as a Calgary alderman, one as an MLA, three terms in the House of Commons and was defeated in a bid for this city's mayor's chair. He also spent four years at the United Nations, two of them assigned to Dag Hammarskjold, the secretary-general.

In 1963 the junior high school graduate who never did get back to finishing his education, opened a public relations firm with a borrowed typewriter and his wife as his secretary.

Until early 1973 he was involved, among other things, in public relations, including helping the Conservatives unseat the Social Credit party in Alberta and building a forestry complex for the Malaysian government. Then he joined the Alberta conglomerate Allarco as a vice-president who got tagged with the specific duty of making Jet Air pay.

That was before Lougheed decided to buy PWA.

"I think in this last situation Premier Lougheed made a mistake.

"The justification for buying PWA was flimsy, the consequences of it were, I thought, never explored and it is contrary to all of the principles on which he campaigned . . . .

"If there is a continuation of absolute plain socialism developing in Alberta or in the country then I would decide to re-enter the political forum with one objective and that is to see a return to sanity . . .

"There is no way that Jet Air is going to compete with a government-owned airline that established itself as a Crown company and avoids federal income taxes, that has the resources of approximately $900 million or $1 billion a year and can buy any number of planes.

"I object on two counts. It totally dislocates the ordinary market place and it's contrary to the principles on which he was elected."

But a threat from the government he helped form is not Smith's only headache. There was also the federal government which has been slow to grant Jet Air routes where passenegr travel is heavy and this, coupled with a record of losses, has led to staff cut to 71 from 135, an end to scheduled routes and a decision to concentrate on Arctic charter business.

"The regulartory system in this country is so slow it is gradually strangling the opportunity for private, small companies to expand in the areas of the regional carriers. Unless the federal government changes that system there won't be any third-level carriers in this country in a couple of years because most of them are in very serious financial difficulties . . .

"I'm not asking for any subsidy, merely the right to fly competitively.

Art Smith
. . . a dying breed

"All the authority Jet Air has had in the past is to fly literally from nowhere to nowhere.

"We are not going to continue on a wide profile hoping we are going to get some routes when we are caught in between two governments, one as a competitor and the other that over-regulates us."

When Art Smith isn't flying about caring for the concerns of Jet Air, he's trying to grab a little time with his family. He has two grown sons and he and his wife adopted a baby girl five years ago.

As for his secret ambition — to writ econtemporary political history — there just isn't time.

That leaves him with his overt ambition — making a contribution to the economic makeup of Canada.

"I suppose that my central objective . . . is to see that this country, particularly western Canada, continues to build in those industries that are going to be in the long run, beneficial to it because we have too few Allarcos . . .

"I would think that our company is unique in terms of being a multi-industry company and with Dr. (Charles) Allard (Allarco's president) I hope to prove that we can select those industries that can be beneficial to the shareholders and to the province as a whole.

"I always have been a strong federalist. I don't believe in the political separations that many ptople advocate because I don't think they are justified. I don't think they'll work. On the other hand I think it is nearly time for western Canada to stop crying and develop, as it must, an economic muscle . . . and I think Allarco is making a contribution to this."

How to leave the arms of Ottawa

george gibson

Taking a federal government department apart, reassefbling it and making it perform in a new role miles away from the comforting arms of Mother Ottawa cannot be considered a simple task.

But that is precisely what is happening in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion (DREE) and the process has been underway since early in 1973.

The Trudeau government had taken a hard look at its role in assisting the economic development of provinces late in 1972 and decided that incentive grants to entice industry to locate in some of the lesser-blessed regions wasn't the complete answer.

So it was decided to put some of the decision-making out where it counted — in the provinces and get DREE involved with the provincial governments in a more overall inspection of ways to develop industry and create employment.

The new policy was announced by DREE Minister Don Jamieson April 10, 1973. The first General Agreement was signed with B.C. in March of this year and two sub-agreements have been signed since then.

The previous agreement, born in 1969, will expire Dec. 31 of this year. It was limited in B.C. — in the incentives part at least — to the southeast corner of the province in the Kootenays. More than $5 million has been absorbed and more than 1,500 jobs created.

Retained under the new program are the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (ARDA) and Special ARDA operations. Special ARDA, in particular, has been a success in creating employment for native people.

The bill to the taxpayer has of course risen with the restructuring — to about $30 million or so per year in B.C. alone—but at least the province is to get a bigger share.

There are now four regional offices set up across the country as well as offices in each province. The regional headquarters have an assistant deputy minister in command. Saskatoon is the location of the regional office for the four western provinces and it is headed up by John McNaught, who prior to that appointment, was a trade commissioner in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The Victoria office, is in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce Building at View and Douglas, and occupies half of the fourth and half of the fifth floors. A year ago it was confined to the fifth floor and had a staff of eight. Now the staff numbers near 30.

The man in charge is William Winston Mair, 60, a graduate in zoology and no stranger to B.C. and the rest of the west.

Mair's masters degree was earned in wildlife management and he followed that path through 1949-52 with the B.C. Game Department; 1952-63 as chief of the Canadian Wildlife Service and 1963-66 as chief of the Natural Resources and Environmental Manitoba government as a policy adviser on resources to the Department of Mines, Resources and Environffental Management. Then in 1972 he joined DREE when they wanted somebody to take a survey of the northern part of the four western provinces. He arrived in Victoria late last year.

"The need for decentralization came through fairly early in our departmental review," Mair said, "because of the fact that it is very hard to apply national programs uniformly across such a diverse country as Canada. There are always local — in the sense of local-provincial — requirements that need some sort of interpretation or application to meet particular needs.

"So they (the department) started looking at the possibilities as to what a decentralized structure might be like and they set up a proper organization for each of the provincial offices and regional offices, based on past experience and the various sort of programs that the department had," he related.

Lining up a staff suited to the task at hand was not simple.

"I was asked early on if I had in mind a staff of pure economists," Mair said, "I said no — I felt that we needed a good cross-section of skills because in a sense we are the frontline troops for the department.

"We wanted people good in their own right — in their own abilities — but we don't need the ability to be specialists because we can reach back into the department to region or Ottawa or even to other departments. We an even hire consultants if we have to.

"The recruiting was left to us. Actually, only about nine, plus a couple of secretaries came out from Ottawa," Mair continued.

The staff roster includes two Ph.Ds in economics, two masters in economics and chemical engineering and several with bachelor degrees in such diverse subjects as commerce, law, agriculture, civil engineering ad industrial arts.

The B.C. office is in five sections: program implementation, analysis and development, incentives administration, special ARDA administration and finance and administration.

"The thing to remember is that DREE isn't a firefighting organization," Mair stressed.

"I think a lot of people thought that when the General Agreement was signed that things were going to happen in a hurry. Well, perhaps that's what was wrong with the way it was done before," Mair said.

"In my view, when we look at a development problem we have to study the basic weaknesses of the situation.

"Then we decide what are the resources available?—both natural and human. What are the marketing problems? Are there other barriers? And what are the national policies which often seem to stand in the way?

"Up to now we seem to have taken on out-of-phase approach. Often the money is made available and then the various levels of government get involved," he went on.

"In my experience in the North lack of money wasn't always the problem. Just look at the millions and millions that have been spent up there and they're still not solving the problems," Mair said.

Soviets buying Jumbo jets

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The Boeing Corp. is expected to announce a $125 million to $300 million sale of 747 Jumbo jets to Russia within 30 days, the Los Angeles Times said Friday, quoting industry sources close to the aerospace firm. An agreement is near under which the Soviet government will buy five to ten 747s, at $25 million to $30 million apiece, the newspaper said.

Burned bridge carrying traffic

FORT ST. JAMES (CP) — The Necoslie bridge on Highway 6 was open to light traffic after being heavily damaged by a fire. A temporary bridge, expected to be open within two weeks, is being installed to handle regular traffic, a highway department official said. Meanwhile, residents have been using a logging road.

Four charged in drug case

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three Hong Kong residents and a Vancouver man were charged with conspiring to traffic in heroin. Chung Man Mah, 34, Chun Ho, 30, Yui Tong Lai, 21 and Fook Lay Tang, 47, were charged with possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking after police seized $3 million in heroin Oct. 16. Bail was denied and they remained in custody.

BOND WEEK

Higher prices

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were higher in fairly active trading on the Canadian bond market this week.

The short end of the market was up about 75 cents while mid and long-term issues were up about 1½ points. Provincials and corporate issues both closed one point higher on the week.

After an initially slow start, the Canadian bond market gave a good reception to a two-part $100-million Ontario Hydro issue, offered Tuesday.

The issue consists of $60 million of 25-year, 10-per-cent bonds priced at 98.50 to yield 10.17 per cent, and $40 million of seven-year, 9⅝-per-cent bonds priced at 99.62 to yield 9.45 per cent.

Other faiths 'enriched' church post

By DON GAIN
Colonist Reporter

O'Connell
. . . new job

Msgr. Michael O'Connell, vicar general of the Roman Catholic diocese of Victoria, credited "representatives of other faiths" with enriching his life on the eve of leaving to take up a new job in Ottawa.

O'Connell leaves this week to be director of ecumenism for the Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops as part of a team working for three years on major conference projects.

He has made a special study of ecumenism and has been involved, as president of the Greater Victoria Council of Churches and in other capacities, in many ecumenical events and projects in Victoria.

Friends in the council of churches, O'Connell said Saturday, "have given me responsibilities and have made me conscious of the traditions and unique gifts found in every church."

"In the past two years it has also been my privilege to meet and work with members of the Evangelical Pastors' Fellowship of Victoria, for which I am most grateful."

"In a world where hunger, sickness, hatred and war are spreading, we cannot afford the luxuries of prejudice, selfishness and racism. Rather, we must listen, pray and work together so that human dignity and freedom may be upheld in a climate of mutual respect and trust."

O'Connell also gave credit to members of his own church who have been a source of inspiration to him ever since he was ordained 24 years ago, and to Bishop Remi De Roo "who has given me encouragement in numerous ways, particularly in ecumenical projects."

He believes the community and church leaders of Greater Victoria have much to be thankful for and much to share with others because of the good relationships they have developed.

"I leave with happy memories and the hope that I can, with the grace of God, share my Victoria and Vancouver Island experiences with others and thus deepen understanding and respect among all believers and contribute in a small way to the cause of justice and peace."

A reception will be held for O'Connell from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. today in St. Patrick's school gymnasium on Trent Street.

Trade edge drops

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's surplus on foreign trade accounts shrank to $31 million during the third quarter from $268 million in the second quarter this year because of declining exports to overseas markets, Statistics Canada reported Friday.

An $82 million deficit on trade with overseas countries wiped out most of the $113 million surplus Canada earned on its trade with the United States. In the second quarter, Canada had a $162 million surplus in its overseas trade.

During September, exports declined to $2.81 billion from $2.85 billion in August. Imports also contracted last month, to $2.8 billion from $2.83 billion in August.

Contributing to the September export decline were lower shipment to the United Kingdom, Japan and the United States that were only partly offset by a small gain to other European Economic Community countries.

Teaching job offered but suddenly withdrawn

Poet-editor-linguist rejected by UVic

By BILL LEVER
Colonist Reporter

Inside the University of Victoria library is a large glass case of literary works displayed as a tribute to an internationally-acclaimed poet, linguist and scholar.

The man thus honored has published some 20 volumes of poetry and countless single poems, articles and essays. He has launched and edited literary magazines containing the works of T.S. Eliot, Ezra Pound and Robert Graves. He has lectured at Oxford, Cambridge and Harvard. He reads 17 languages and has a vast knowledge of the sciences, mathematics, history, theology, philosophy, music and art.

The man is Peter Russell who, just over a year ago, was invited to the University of Victoria as poet-in-residence.

Today Russell is without a job, a UVic reject, and the subject of the latest cause celebre on campus.

And that handsome display case in the library seems not so much a tribute as a satire on life in the academic jungle.

Although his appointment as poet in-residence was for only one year, Russell was tentatively invited to remain at UVic as a lecturer in the creative writing department. But in the end he didn't get the job, and he was never told why.

University officials won't publicly state the reason but Russell is a controversial figure in stuffier academic circles and he does have a reputation for exuberance.

But he's also got a reputation as an outstanding poet, a dedicated teacher and scholar who devotes enormous amounts of time and energy to his work.

"I've been tremendously enthusiastic about my work at UVic," Russell said in an interview this week. "I really love it here. I like the students and I have the impression they like me."

Apparently they do, as Russell's rejection by the university has become a much-discussed issue on campus. The student newspaper, The Martlet, devoted three full pages to an outline of Russell's background and to an attack on the absurdity of a man of his qualifications not being allowed to teach.

A native of England, Russell, 53, had been living in Venice for several years before coming to Victoria and he may soon be moving back.

"I don't really mind where I am as long as there are friendly people and books," he said, but he would definitely prefer to stay in Canada and to continue teaching.

"Teaching provides an income and still allows plenty of time for writing and studying. You can't make a living from poetry, and it seems the more serious you are at poetry, the more difficult it is to make a living."

Though Russell says he "adores the academic world — it should be my natural habitat," the UVic experience wasn't his first disappointment with institutional education.

In 1949 he was offered a position teaching comparative literature at Duke University in North Carolina — an offer that was withdrawn when the university administrators discovered he had published writing by "the traitor Ezra Pound."

In the years since, Russell has concentrated on writing, lecturing, teaching languages and tutoring doctoral students in a variety of fields.

Although he has worked in more interesting people in the beer parlor than in the university."

But Russell added that on the whole he has been very happy with the University of Victoria, even if "some individuals have far too much power."

"I wanted to stay here, I still do. It's heartbreaking, really, to have to leave."

Hitler portrait saved in blaze

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Firefighters still were at the scene when Martin Weiche, former president of the Canadian National Socialist Party, rushed into his smouldering home to rescue a portrait of Adolph Hitler which he said was painted in 1945 by a "Canadian artist of German extraction."

Weiche said he found it "hard to accept that this fire could have started by accident," because "the walls are six inches of concrete behind the brick and I used steel and reinforced concrete to build it."

He said it was the third time his living quarters or office space had been ravaged by fire, and attributed the fires to "my political philosophy."

Working age lower

Fifteen-year-old students will be allowed to work while enrolled in school as a result of amendments to the Public Schools Act approved by the government.

The students will be exempt from the Minimum Wage Act and will need special permission from school authorities and their parents.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly said the change is designed to allow students to "prepare for employment that is satisfying as well as financially successful.

Liverpool earns clear lead Celtic captures Scottish Cup

LONDON (AP) — Steve Heighway's goal Saturday sent Liverpool into a clear lead in the race for the English League First Division soccer title.

Heighway's goal in the 77th minute was enough to give Liverpool a 1-0 win over defending-champion Leeds United.

Liverpool took a one-point lead over Manchester City, held to a 1-1 draw at Ipswich.

Celtic, in the Scottish League Cup final for the 11th successive season, ended a run of four straight defeats, by overpowering Hibernian, 6-3, as Dixie Deans scored a hat-trick for Celtic and Joe Harper netted all three goals for Hebernian, Jimmy Johnstone, Paul Wilson and Steve Murray were Celtics other scorers.

In a key English League First Division game, Arsenal, languishing in bottom place, suddenly clicked into form and blanked West Ham, 3-0.

Arsenal swamped West Ham with goals by John Radford, Liam Brady and Brian Kidd. Arsenal's England star Alan Ball, who has twice broken a leg, was carried off on a stretcher after collapsing near the end of the match with an ankle injury.

Chelsea grabbed a last-minute equalizer to draw 3-3 with Stoke.

Queen's Park Rangers eased their relegation worries with a 2-1 win away to Wolverhampton Wanderers, the Londoner's first win under new manager Dave Sexton.

Middlesbrough moved closer to the leaders with a 3-2 win over Derby County.

Midford star Trevor Francis looked to have lost his chance of playing for England in Wednesday's European championship match against Czechoslovakia when he left the field with a pulled leg muscle in Birmingham City's 3-2 loss to Sheffield United.

Coventry City continued to improve with a 2-1 victory over Carlisle United. Larry Lloyd scored both Coventry goals.

Another team emerging from a slump was Leicester City, an upset 1-0 victory away to Newcastle United.

Striker Stuart Pearson returned to Manchester United's team after missing three matches through injury and scored the 56th minute goal which earned a 1-0 win over Southampton.

Tiger of year

Al Kaline, who last month became the 12th player in major league baseball history to collect 3000 hits, has been named "Tiger of the Year" by the Detroit chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association of America. The 22-year American League veteran, who retired at the end of the season, received 24 of 27 votes. Relief-pitcher John Hiller picked up the other three votes.

Player harassed into tourney lead

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — South African Gary Player shrugged off anti-apartheid demonstrators who tried to mar his play and led the field following the third round Saturday of the $46,000 Wills Masters golf tournament.

Player returned a third-round 70 for a 54-hole total of 210, six under par on the 7148 - yard Australian Golf Club course.

He finished one shot ahead of Australians Ted Ball and Jack Newton in the 54-hole figures after they returned par rounds of 72 each, and two strokes ahead of Australian David Graham.

American Tom Kite, who held the lead after Friday's second round, dropped to sixth place with a 77 Saturday and a total of 214.

Black and white anti-apartheid demonstrators booed and heckled Player and clashed with Player's supporters.

Before the opening of play, they had tried to sabotage three greens at the Australian Golf Club course.

One demonstrator was reported to have been arrested and charged by police.

Reporters at the course said the demonstrators mingled in Player's gallery from the start of the day's play.

A black protester coughed loudly to distract Player at the first tee, the reporters said, and when police moved him away other demonstrators shouted: "Why do you arrest my black brother?"

At the fourth hole, a dozen demonstrators chanted, "Blacks can't watch golf in South Africa," and a Player supporter knocked one demonstrator to the ground with a punch to the jaw. Police and officials moved in and took 12 more demonstrators off the course.

Player tried to talk with the demonstrators at the fourth, but officials told him to stay in the centre of the green.

"All I can do is go on and play golf," Player said. And he did.

Early Saturday, golf club officials found that lime had been spread on three greens at the course.

"Go home racist," had been painted on the 12th green, in reference to South Africa's policy of racial segregation, and "Racist" had been painted on the 13th tee.

Borg upset by Mexican

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Paul Ramirez of Mexico beat Sweden's teen-age star Bjorn Borg, the No. 2 seed, 6-0, 6-1, Saturday in a men's singles semi-final match at the $100,000 Aryamehr professional tennis tournament.

In the other semi-final, Guillermo Vilas of Argentina beat Brazilian Thomas Koch, 6-0, 6-3. Ramirez will meet Vilas in today's finals.

Oilers trade Harrison

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland Crusaders of the World Hockey Association said Saturday they have obtained centre Jim Harrison in a trade with Edmonton Oilers.

The Crusaders gave up veteran centre Ron Buchanan and undisclosed future considerations to get the 27-year-old Harrison.

Harrison was under suspension by the Oilers for refusing to play for them. The Crusaders wouldn't say how much he is signing for, but one unofficial report was that he will receive about $600,000 over a four-year period.

Flyers and Black Hawks reach top of divisions

Philadelphia Flyers and Chicago Black Hawks earned a share of first place in their respective National Hockey League divisions Saturday but took different routes to victory.

The Stanley Cup champion Flyers, somewhat subdued after a penalty-filled clash with California Golden Seals on Friday, needed a goal from Jim Watson with only 65 seconds remaining to snatch a 3-2 win over Vancouver Canucks.

Chicago, meanwhile, had little difficulty with the sagging Toronto Maple Leafs, coasting to a 9-3 win at Maple Leaf Gardens.

In Vancouver, the Canucks jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first period but fell into a tie when reserve-centre Bill Clements fired his first two goals of the season, 58 seconds apart, midway through the second period.

Flyers came on strong in the final period but were stymied by the Vancouver defenders and goalkeeper Gary Smith, who was tested 25 times.

Watson's goal came following a faceoff in the Vancouver end, Bobby Clarke winning the draw and Reg Leach feeding the puck back to the blue line. Watson's 60-foot shot eluded Smith and the Flyers went on to their fifth win of the season.

The result moved Philadelphia into a deadlock with New York Islanders, who continued their blistering early-season pace with a 4-0 win over tthe visiting Minnesota North Stars Islanders, beaten only once this season, enjoy two games in hand on the Flyers.

In Toronto, veterans Stan Mikita and Dennis Hull fired two goals each as the Hawks broke the game open with six straight goals, three in the second period.

In the middle session, Mikita scored on a power play slightly more than a minute after the opening faceoff to put the Hawks up by 3-1 and the Toronto defences folded.

Chicago took complete control and skated rings around the Leafs, Hull and J.P. Bordeleau scoring before the period ended.

Toronto goalkeeper Dunc Wilson was replaced by Doug Favell in the third period but the Chicago onslaught continued, Favell being tagged for four more goals as Chicago ran up its highest goals total of the season.

The victory moved the Hawks into a first-place deadlock with the Canucks in the Smythe Division and Chicago has a game in hand.

At Uniondale, Clark Gillies scored his first NHL goal to give the Islanders the lead and Billy Smith went on to post his second shutout of the season -- tops in the league.

Islanders, eighth in goals-allowed last season, have given up only 15 goals in seven games this campaign and have scored 30 times, a vast improvement from their league-low of 2.33 goals per game last season.

Islanders and Flyers have a two-point edge on Atlanta Flames and New York Rangers in the Patrick Division.

Rangers climbed into a share of third place with a 5-4 win over the Penguins in Pittsburgh. Steve Vickers broke a 4-4 tie with about two minutes to play with his second goal of the game.

LOU HARRIS of the B.C. Lions has had a season which ordinarily would make him an almost-automatic winner of the Schenley Award as the outstanding player in the Canadian Football League but he doesn't look any better than a 3-1 shot. He first has to beat out the amazing George Reed in the Western Conference, and then the next hurdle would be to get more votes than flashy Johnny Rodgers, who can be tabbed as certain to be voted the outstanding player in the Eastern Conference . . . going into last night's game, the eight leading scorers in the CFL didn't have a single touchdown between them . . . and if there is anyone still wondering about the ability of Don Moorhead, only Ron Lancaster (19) has thrown more touchdown passes in the CFL this season. Not only did Moorhead have 17 scoring throws after the Lions' first 16 games, but he also had fewer passes intercepted than any quarterback who had thrown 250 or more. His total was 13, Lancaster led with 20 . . . it had been quite a while since I last went fishing with Jack Seedhouse but a Friday trip off Oak Bay showed that he hadn't lost the touch. The bag was six salmon, and I thought I did well to wind up no worse than 2-4 . . . Jim Champion, who came to B.C. Lions from St. Louis Cardinals to serve as assistant and head coach, is regaining any stature he may have lost by leaving the National Football League. Back with the Cardinals as defence coach, he is enjoying the fruits of a 6-0 start for his club . . . best tickets for the Grey Cup game this year are priced at $17.50, and while that may be a bit much, they're a bargain compared to the $20 tops being charged in Vancouver for the heavyweight championship fight between George Foreman and Muhhamad Ali. That could turn out to be a damp joke . . . pre-season reports that Washington Capitals had sold out their arena and were to be an instant NHL success seem to have been somewhat exaggerated. The early crowds have been averaging less than 9,000, and it isn't likely the Capitals are going to do anything this season to encourage more fan support . . . and it will be interesting to see how Kansas City Scouts do when they finally get to play at home. Because of arena construction delays, they had to start the season with an eight-game road trip, and they're 0-6-1 with a game coming up in Boston tonight. The Scouts get home next Saturday against Chicago Black Hawks . . .

VICTORIA COUGARS are likely to be one if the most-scouted teams in junior hockey this season, and two of six or seven reasons are Victoria-youngsters Mel Bridgman and Rick LaPointe. There are already out-of-town speculations that both could go in the first two rounds of the NHL draft. And so could one or two teammates . . . Bridgman was the top producer on that gruelling 10-game road trip with 12 goals and 15 assists, but there was plenty of scoring help from Peter Morris (9-13), Jim Gustafson (10-8) and Danny Lucas, who was handicapped by sickness and missed some action but still provided 11 assists to go along with his goal . . . coach Marshall Johnston of California Golden Seals would win easily if there was an award for the most-fatuous hockey comment of the season. After the Seals, who won all of 13 games last season, had managed no better than a 4-4 tie with fledgling Kansas City Scouts, Johnston explained that it was tough to get his club up for an expansion team like that . . . the best high school football team in Michigan has a fellow name Rockey Rote as its tight-end and a tackle name Matt Morall. Yes, their dads were indeed those celebrated quarterbacks, Tobin Rote and Earl Morrall . . . any thoughtful sports fan will agree with the opinion that the Western Canada Hockey League should not allow defenceman Greg Neeld to play. He lost an eye last season while playing for Toronto Marlboros and the risk of an injury that could leave him blinded is too great. Besides, unless there is a change of policy, he won't be able to play in the NHL . . . Bob Nevin in his prime was one of the more under-rated players in the NHL, and one of the pleasant developments of this season is the standout play of the 36-year-old rightwinger. He's one of the big reasons Los Angeles Kings got away so well . . . World Team Tennis wasn't much of a success, and John Bassett unloaded Toronto Royals after the first season. The Royals split their home appearances between Toronto and Buffalo, averaging less than 2000 paid for their 11 Toronto matches and less than 3500 for the same number of matches in Buffalo. The operating loss was probably in excess of $500,000, yet the Royals were in the top three in attendance . . .

TORONTO ARGOS certainly made a great trade when they got tackle Granny Liggins from Calgary Stampeders in exchange for Leon McQuay, the reluctant running-back, but the Argos have more than made up for it this season. They sent running-back Pete Watson and linebacker Steve Smear to Saskatchewan Roughriders for Bill Baker, then wound up with Canadian linebacker George Anderson when they sent Baker to B.C. Lions. The Argos also sent George Wells, a better-than-average defence end, to Saskatchewan for quarterback Jim Lindsey, who was released some time ago. It adds up to Anderson for Smear, Wells and Watson . . . a Scottish Youth Team will compete at Crystal Pool on Nov. 26 against a team picked from the four area swimming clubs . . . if you don't think that the world is changing, the British women's open golf tournament is scheduled to be played on the Old Course at St. Andrews next year. And worse than that, Gorde, the ladies will not only have use of the clubhouse and locker rooms but they will also be allowed to enter the Big Room and the Silence Room . . . there has been one delay after another in the construction of the New Orleans Superdome, but the thing to wonder about is not the date of completion but who will be able to afford the rental. The latest estimate is that operating costs, including interest charges, will average $37,500 a day — and that's for every day of the year, rented or not . . . the B.C. Sports Hall of Fame, which is located in the B.C. Nordiques run streak to four World Hockey Association play has been on for more than two weeks, but there are still two undefeated teams in the Canadian Division.

Quebec Nordiques remained one of the two clubs by defeating Phoenix Roadrunners, 4-1, Saturday before 8,879 fans at the Quebec Coliseum.

Rejean Houle started the Nordiques off with a goal at 1:22 of the first period. Rejean Cloutier added the second goal five minutes later and Francois Lacombe made it, 3-0, at 12:18 of the first period.

Cam Connor scored for Phoenix before the end of the first period, but Serge Bernier made it 4-1 with his fourth of the season, in the third period.

The victory was the fourth for the Nordiques and left them two points behind Toronto Toros, who are unbeaten in five starts and lead the Canadian Division.

In a game played before 3,471 fans at West Springfield, Massachussetts, New England Whalers extended their lead in the Eastern Division by dumping winless, Indianapolis Racers, 6-1.

PHOENIX (1) — Cam Connor. QUEBEC (4) — Serge Bernier, Rejean Houle, Francois Lacombe, Rejean Cloutier. Attendance: 8879.

INDIANAPOLIS (1) — Steve Andrascik. NEW ENGLAND (6) — Larry Pleau, Tim Sheehy, Terry Caffery, Rick Ley, Thommy Abrahmsson, Al Karlander. Attendance: 3471.

ESSEN, West Germany (AFP) — Christa Vahlensieck-Kofferschlaeger, 25, of West Germany broke the women's world marathon record Saturday with a run of 2:42:38, topping the old mark of 2:46:18 set by Miki Corman, 38, of the United States in December, 1973.

Saleski and one mate suspended after wild outbreak in Oakland

Don Saleski
. . . suspended

Two Philadelphia Flyers have been suspended as the result of Friday night's wild National Hockey League game in Oakland . . . but which two seems to be in doubt.

Don Saleski and Bob Kelly sat out Saturday night's game in Vancouver after Philadelphia officials received a wire advising of the immediate suspensions by league president Clarence Campbell.

But in Montreal, Brian O'Neill, executive director of the NHL, said that suspensions had been handed Saleski and Dave Schultz.

All three Flyers were among eight players given game misconduct penalties by referee Bryan Lewis after a bench-clearing episode in the game won by California Golden Seals, 4-1.

The game produced an NHL record 232 minutes in penalties, the major portion of which came after forward Orest Kindrachuk of the Flyers and defenceman Mike Christie of the Seals clashed in the third period.

In addition to Saleski, Schultz and Kelly, Kindrachuk and Andre Dupont of the Flyers and Christie, Len Frig and Jim Neilson of the Seals drew game misconducts.

Schultz and Christie had drawn majors after a first-period fight and Schultz received another major in the second period after tangling with John Stewart.

O'Neill said that the suspensions would remain in effect at least until a hearing is held by Campbell later this week.

Canadiens win, so do Kings

Montreal Canadiens have finally achieved a winning record.

They made it at home Saturday night by scoring two late goals to get by Detroit Red Wings, 4-2.

The result moved Canadiens within a point of the Wings, who hold down second place in the Norris Division, but the surprising Los Angeles Kings remained four points ahead of Canadiens by knocking off California Golden Seals, 5-1.

Meanwhile, Buffalo Sabres broke the four-way tie that existed in the Adams Division, blanking St. Louis Blues, 2-0, to take over first place.

The stubborn Wings twice caught Canadiens, but Guy Lafleur broke the 2-2 tie with a fine individual effort which brought him his first goal of the season. Less than three minutes later, Murray Wilson also came through with his first goal of the season to give Canadiens a more comfortable lead.

Lafleur also drew two assists, helping Bob Gainey to open the scoring and then feeding a pass on the goal scored by Yvan Lambert, who leads his club with seven goals.

Rick Dudley's first two goals of the season, one in the first period and the other in the second, were more than enough for rookie Gary Bromley of the Sabres, who scored his first NHL shutout.

Dudley's first goal was the 15th power-play goal scored against the Blues this season.

Bob Nevin (2), Bob Berry, Juha Widing and Gene Carr scored for the Kings. Stan Weir got the California goal.

Next games: Tonight — Regina at VICTORIA, Brandon at Lethbridge, Calgary at Saskatoon, Kamloops at New Westminster.

What a difference a year makes.

Last season at this time, Victoria Cougars were headed for their third straight fifth-place finish in the Western Division of the Western Canada Hockey League.

Today, they're leading that division, and can add to their points total tonight when Regina Pats visit Memorial Arena for a 7:30 p.m. game.

Cougars have recently finished the most successful road trip in their WCHL history, a 10-game jaunt which resulted in six wins and two ties for the Island club, including a 7-5 win over the defending Memorial Cup champions in Regina.

Cougars outscored their opponents 57-40 on the road trip and coach Pat Ginnell plans no lineup changes. But he may add defenceman Gordie Roberts providing he gets approval from league president Ed Chynoweth before game time.

Roberts, a 17-year-old rookie from Detroit, has been under suspension for the last three games pending a ruling by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association over a transfer problem.

The CAHA is meeting in Ottawa this weekend and the Roberts case is expected to be considered and a ruling made today.

Roberts played last season for Detroit Wings of the Southern Ontario Hockey League and was subsequently drafted by Sudbury Wolves of the Ontario Hockey Association. But, Roberts decided to play this season in the WCHL and the Wolves have filed a protest with the CAHA

If Roberts does not play, Ginnell will likely use Lori Gloeckner, who played extremely well in the latter stages of the road trip, in his place.

In Saturday action, the Pats upset the Bruins, 4-1, in New Westminster while Medicine Hat Tigers rolled to a 6-0 win over the visiting Brandon Wheat Kings.

REGINA (4) — Dave Faulkner, Rob Tudor 2, Jon Hammond; NEW WESTMINSTER (1) Kelly Secord. Attendance—1989.

BRANDON (0) — MEDICINE HAT (6) — Bryan Maxwell, Don Murdock, Greg Vaydik 3, Boychuk.

Victoria harriers top B.C. classes

VANCOUVER — Two runners from Victoria won titles Saturday in the B.C. cross-country championships at Brockton Oval.

Joanie Oakley of Esquimalt Athletic Club captured the juvenile girls 4000-metre event and Jonathan Smith of Victoria Flying "Y" took the 4000-metre midget boys race.

Clubmate Karen Egger, now a student at University of British Columbia, finished third to Miss Oakley.

Smith led a one-two-three finish for Victoria competitors. Bob Noble of Esquimalt finished one second behind Smith and Kevin Kendall of Victoria Mercuries was five seconds behind the winner. Vancouver Olympic Club took the team title with Esquimalt finishing second.

In the midget girls 2000-metre event, won by VOC's Helen McDonald, June Rainey of Esquimalt was third, Ulla Hansen of Mercuries took fourth and Sharon Doherty of Esquimalt was fifth. Richmond Kajaks edged out Esquimalt for the team title.

In the 6000-metre juvenile boys run, John Martens of Kajaks nipped Tom Griffin of Mercuries by 4.5 seconds. Brian Blamey and Mike Long, both of Mercuries, finished sixth and 10th, respectively. Simon Fraser University grabbed the team title by four points over Mercuries.

Alan Baker of SFU took the 8000-metre junior boys event in 27.45 minutes, eight seconds ahead of runner-up Jim Thorne of University of Victoria.

Two course records were set in the open-division races.

Thelma Wright of UBC set the women's mark with a time of 13.13.2 minutes. Sharon Young of Esquimalt was fifth and Bev Cox of UVic came 11th in the 4000-metre run.

Tom Howard of Richmond established the new men's mark with a clocking of 37.42 minutes for the 12,000 metres. Former Victorian John Wheeler of UBC was second and another former Victoria runner, Norm Patenaude, competing for Richmond, finished ninth. Chris Garrett-Petts of Victoria Flying "Y" was 27th. UBC's "A" squad took the team title with Kajaks finishing second.

Oak Bay wins Island title

By REG REYNOLDS

Oak Bay's defence proved unbeatable again Saturday and the Bays won the Vancouver Island girls' field hockey championship.

Nancy Littley scored with less than a minute remaining in the championship final to give Oak Bay a 1-0 victory over Cowichan, the defending B.C. champions, at Lansdowne Junior High School.

Oak Bay's defence anchored by goaltender Susan Oliver, didn't allow a goal in four tournament games. In 10 league games Miss Oliver had eight shutouts and allowed just two goals.

Play was fairly even through the first half and most of the second half, but Oak Bay had the pressure on in the final minutes, and got the winner off a corner by Sue Taylor. Joan Carruthers made a fine hand stop on Miss Taylor's shot but Miss Littley scored on the rebound.

Both Cowichan and Oak Bay advance to the B.C. championship Friday and Saturday at the University of British Columbia.

Mt. Douglas, which last year shared Island honors with Cowichan, picked up the other berth in the provincial tournament, with a 1-0 win over Norfolk House in a challenge match.

Brenda Cameron overcame the outstanding goaltending of Sue Horner, and scored the Mt. Douglas goal with four minutes remaining.

Miss Horner made several difficult saves and won a penalty bully, in the match, the third of the day for both teams.

Mt. Douglas had earned third spot by defeating Brentwood College, 2-0, on a pair of goals by Roberta Feldman, but Norfolk finished fourth by edging Dunsmuir, 1-0, on a goal by Nina Bland and under tournament rules were allowed to challenge Mt. Douglas for the third B.C. berth.

Oak Bay had earned the final berth with a 3-0 win over Brentwood College, while Cowichan made the finals with a 1-0 win over Mt. Douglas.

Last year the same three teams, Oak Bay, Mt. Douglas and Cowichan played in the B.C. tournament, Mt. Douglas finished sixth and Oak Bay 10th.

Eskimos clinch western title, dealing Lions crushing loss

EDMONTON — Edmonton Eskimos are Western Football Conference champions, and B.C. Lions need help to finish second and may need help to qualify for the three-team playoff.

That was all decided here Saturday night when the Eskimos delighted a record Edmonton crowd of 25,009 by clobbering the West Coast club, 31-8.

Result gave Eskimos 19 points from their first 15 games, and put them out of reach of the Lions, who share second place with Saskatchewan Roughriders, and have 16 points with one game remaining.

Lions and Eskimos wind up their schedules next Saturday in Vancouver, and even if the Lions win they will get second place only if Montreal Alouettes win or tie today in Saskatchewan. And if the Lions lose again, a playoff position will depend on Winnipeg Blue Bombers losing at least two points in their home-and-home windup against Calgary's out-of-it Stampeders.

It was strictly no contest Saturday, the B.C. defence yielding two touchdowns in the first 10 minutes. It was far too much for the B.C. offence, led for the first time by Peter Liske and with running-star Lou Harris handicapped by a sore foot. Although they did get to 7-14 after a fumbled punt, the Lions never really threatened.

Smartly led at quarterback by the veteran Tom Wilkinson and boosted by the return of receiver George McGowan, the Eskimos scored touchdowns on their first two series. Then they went 62 yards in the last two minutes of the first half for a third major score, and ended all reasonable doubt by tacking on another seven points in the fifth minute of the third quarter.

McGowan, winner of the Schenley Award as the outstanding player in the Canadian Football League last year but out of action for all but about 10 minutes in the first 14 games, figured inportantly in each of the four Edmonton touchdowns.

He got Eskimos started with a 14-yard second-down catch, and they went on from there to complete a 65-yard march with Calvin Harrell diving over from a yard on the eighth play.

It took only three plays to get 66 yards the next time Eskimos had the ball, and the reason was a 58-yard pass to Today's game between Saskatchewan Roughriders and Montreal Alouettes will be telecast on channel 8 started at 1:30 p.m.

McGowan which set up a one-yard touchdown for Roy Bell. A 44-yard reception by McGowan made it possible for the Eskimos to beat the clock in the first half, and he scored the fourth touchdown by taking a 26-yard pass in the end zone.

After that, the Eskimos stayed exclusively on the ground, and Bell, who picked up about 100 yards, and Harrell killed off the clock, and also set up a 16-yard field goal for Dave Cutler, who made good on all four convert chances.

Although he passed creditably, completing 17 of 32 throws for 235 yards, Liske could never establish the ground game which has been the B.C. strength this year.

The Lions gained only 75 yards on ground plays, most of it by Monroe Eley. Harris, who limped noticeably in the second half, was held to less than 25 yards for the game and carried the ball only five times in the first half. However, he was Liske's favorite target, picking off five passes and scoring the only B.C. touchdown when he combined neatly with Liske for a 39-yard scoring play.

It was Harris' 12th touchdown of the season, the most in the CFL, and it brought the Lions within seven points with more than 40 minutes remaining. Their defence tightened noticeably with the score and got the ball back twice without yielding a first down. But then Liske aimed a pass at Slade Willis, threw it too low and Dan McDonough was able to leap high enough to knock it down and then gather it in.

Wilkinson, who did it several times in the game, then drew the Lions offside on a short - yardage third - down play. Two plays later came the 44-yard pass to McGowan, and Harrell beat the clock by four seconds with the score that took the starch out of the Lions.

VANCOUVER — University of British Columbia Thunderbirds took the Canada West University Athletic Association soccer championship Saturday with a key victory over University of Victoria Vikings.

Thunderbirds overcame a two-goal deficit in the opening half and edged the Vikings, 4-3. On Thursday, the two teams battled to a 2-2 draw.

In later matches Saturday, UVic downed Saskatchewan Huskies 3-1, while Alberta Golden Bears upset UBC, 2-1. However, the host team captured the title over Vikings by virtue of a 19-7 advantage in goal spread.

Darryl Samson led the UBC comeback with three goals. Bob Baker was the other scorer for Thunderbirds. Vic Escude, Gord Mancini and Tim Page scored for UVic.

In UVic's triumph over Huskies, Doug Furitch scored twice and Mancini once. In both Saturday matches, Vikings held a 2-0 halftime lead.

Trevino loses lead

NAGOYA, Japan (AP)—Japan's Kosaku Shimada fired a five-under-par 67 to take a four-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $133,000 Tokai Classic golf tournament.

Lee Trevino, 1974 PGA champion, was one-over par 73 and shared an over-all 209 score for second place with Japanese Teruo Sugihara who fired a 70 on the 7065-yard, par-72 Miyoshi Country Club course in suburban Nagoya, central Japan. Trevino was the second-round leader.

Nanaimo tenpinners may build own lanes

By KING LEE

Wheels are beginning to turn in the Nanaimo area in attempts to have a tenpin centre back by the start of the 1975-76 season.

Between 350 and 400 tenpin bowlers in the Nanaimo area were left without facilities when Fiesta Lanes decided to convert the 12 tenpin lanes upstairs to fivepins before the current season got under way.

An effort begun by bowlers Jim and Alice Soon and supported by Alderman Arnie Dugan has mushroomed to the point where an investigative committee, headed by travel-agent Bill McFarlane, was struck at a recent meeting attended by about 80 people.

Smaller sub-committees have been formed in attempts to find out the feasibility of having a non-profit, community-supported tenpin centre.

On the building committee are contractor Norval Wheatcroft and engineer Bruce Barlow. Besides chairing the effort, McFarlane is also on the finance committee with Joy Cameron. May Rogers is the secretary and Vi Cook is in charge of publicity.

The committees will report back on Nov. 13 and a general meeting will be held shortly after to hear the reports and to decide whether to carry on or not.

McFarlane says the group is looking at the possibility of having a 12-lane house, with an option for four more lanes in the future, in a cement-block building which would cost in the neighborhood of $196,000.

The plan, as McFarlane sees it, is to enlist the city's help in the same way the curling club did and eventually go public, selling shares in the operation.

Two sites are being looked into initially, one in the vicinity of the Nanaimo Curling Club and the other in the Exhibition Park area on Bowen Road. The former is city-owned property.

McFarlane agreed that the best thing would be for a private investor to come along, but so far, none has.

Helmets urged for officials

TORONTO (CP) — Hugh McLean, a referee-in-chief of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association (CAHA), wanted all association officials to wear helmets next season.

Referees and linesmen in the Ontario Minor Hockey Association will don helmets next year, and McLean says he will introduce a motion at the CAHA's annual meeting in Quebec City next May to introduce the same rule in his association.

Lansdowne girls capture title

Lansdowne defeated Colquitz, 3-0, in the final of the six-team double knockout tourney Saturday to capture the Greater Victoria junior high school girls' field hockey championship.

Heather Benson scored twice and Debbie Smith once to give Lansdowne the win in the two-day, nine-team tourney played at Windsor Park and the top berth in the Island championship scheduled for Friday and Saturday at Lansdowne.

Colquitz gets the No. 2 spot and Cedar Hill won the third and final berth with a 1-0 win over Arbutus on a goal by Andrea Anderson.

Arbutus finished fourth, Central fifth, S. J. Willis sixth, Oak Bay seventh, Reynolds eighth and Highrock ninth.

Do-it Yourself TIPS

REMOVING SPOTS FROM WALLPAPER — Almost any grease can be removed from a papered or plastered wall with a paste made by mixing powdered China clay (2 or 3 oz.) with enough carbon tetrachloride to form a thick paste over the spot to be removed. Let it dry, then dust it off. Some spots may require a couple of applications.

HEATED WORDS, which were followed by blows, are exchanged by Ron Thompson (9) of London Boxing Club, being restrained by George Pakos, and Bill Hamilton (5) of Oak Bay during Premier Division soccer action Saturday at Royal Athletic Park. The clubs played to a scoreless tie.

Boxers earn share of lead

Powell River nips Vic West

London Boxing Club edged into first place Saturday but it was Powell River Villas who made the biggest jump in the premier division of the Vancouver Island Soccer League.

The unbeaten Boxers fought to a scoreless draw with Oak Bay in a match at Royal Athletic Park and pulled even with the University of Victoria Vikings. Both London Boxing Club and the Vikings have five wins and a two ties from seven games.

Goalkeeper Kjeld Brodsgaard registered his fifth shutout of the season for the Boxers — tops in the league — while Jack Kuyvenhoven came up with a solid effort for his second shutout.

In Powell River, the Villas bounced back with two goals in the last five minutes for a 6-5 victory over Vic West. The result boosted the mainland squad into fifth place, only two points behind Oak Bay.

Gary McLaren scored his second goal of the game for Vic West, shortly after the interval and the lead stood up until Brian Gomez equalized for the Villas at 85 minutes. Three minutes later, Larry Louie broke the tie to give the Villas their second win in seven outings.

Ian Orchiston, with three goals, and Gomez scored for Powell River in the first half and Greg Booth, John McGuire and Robbie Williams were the other Vic West marksmen.

Kooky vacation ideas

Dream merchants' specials

GRAND OPENING!

Colonist-Los Angeles Times Service

You like kooky vacations? How about tramping through Botswana or skinny-dipping along some quiet beach in Yugoslavia?

So maybe you'd prefer hunting opals in Australia?

These and other upbeatoffbeat vacation ideas are presently being promoted by the dream merchant — the travel agent — the guy who is bent on sewing seeds of discontent among each of us. The wanderlust, if you will.

The safari to Botswana is part of an African tour the Lindblad people are beating the drums over. Besides Botswana, the safari will take in Malawi, Kenya, Tanzania, Rhodesia and the Republic of South Africa.

At the same time, the Lindblad Explorer will be cruising to West and North Africa, commencing in Dakar with calls in Mauritania, the Canary Islands, Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Egypt. Folders are available from your local travel agent or by writing to Lindblad, 133 E. 50th St., N.Y. 10022.

For those preferring a vacation in the buff, skinny-dip tours of New York has in mind dozens of beaches and resorts in Yugoslavia as well as one special island hideaway in the Caribbean.

Those choosing to join Skinny-Dip's Thanksgiving tour to the unnamed Caribbean isle are promised that "only the turkey will be dressed."

Drop a card to Skinny Dip, 16 E. 42nd St., N.Y. 10017.

Conservation, skin diving, gem collecting, farming and ranching are among the special interest tours being heralded by Qantas, the Australian airline.

Prices start at $1,695 and include transportation, hotels, full American breakfasts, dinners, sight-seeing and transfers.

In a bid for the North American tourist, Air India is bannering nearly a dozen cruises aboard the 350-passenger luxury liner, Mt. Orpheus.

Starting in Bombay, the ship will call at four Indian ports. During the voyage passengers will dine on Indian, Chinese and Western cuisine, be entertained by sitar players and Indian dancers, and as a bonus will be given free yoga lessons.

Among the ports of call will be the coral-ringed Laccadive Islands, Ceylon, Cochin in South India and Goa.

The price for the whole happy affair, including the round-trip hop by Air India from New York comes to $999 plus tax.

Other travel agents, together with Lufthansa, the German carrier, are cooing over a romantic vacation package at Vorauf in the Bavarian Alps. Just outside Munich, Vorauf is a brand-new community of A-frame chalets surrounded by snow-covered alpine peaks.

The Europa Car, Fly and Drive Chalet Vacation (one, two and three weeks) includes a rental car, with unlimited mileage.

Vorauf features a choice of chalets ranging from studio apartments to big three-bedroom cottages equipped with linens, towels, bedding, dishes and daily maid service. For a party of six, rates start at $119 per person for the week.

A headquarters for skiers during winter, in the summertime Vorauf boasts three swimming pools, eight tennis courts, horses, nearby golf courses and sailing on Lake Chiemsee.

From Vorauf, sightseers motor off to Salzburg, Berchtesgaden and Garmisch-Partenkirchen, with detours to the romantic castles created by Mad King Ludwig.

If luxury is your bag, the Cunard steamship people will tuck you inside a $97,035 suite aboard the Queen Elizabeth 2 for her forthcoming 80-day world cruise. Should you be looking for something cheaper, fares start at $5,400.

During the voyage the QE 2 will spend 38 days at sea and 42 days in ports with visits to Port Everglades, Curacao, Salvador de Bahia, Durban, Mombase, the Seychelles, Bombay, Colombo, Singapore, Bali, Hong Kong, Kobe, Yokohama, Honolulu, Acapulco, Balboa, Cristobal and Cartagena.

Sailing Jan. 10 from New York, the Queen will pay a visit to Los Angeles.

Business to pay transit expenses

SURREY (CP) — The provincial government will introduce legislation that will allow the brunt of transit costs to be placed on shopping centres and commercial cores rather than on homeowners, Municipal Affairs Minister Jim Lorimer says.

Another cold war?

United Nations arms control expert William Epstein has devoted a quarter century to the challenges of peace and disarmament—and for the first time he is becoming seriously frightened for the future of the world.

Addressing a meeting of the Victoria United Nations Association Thursday, Epstein said he is "beginning to get really scared. Despite more than a dozen arms limitation treaties, the arms race continues at a faster and more dangerous clip than ever."

Epstein, now semi-retired after serving as director of disarmament for the U.N. secretariat since 1951, is teaching two courses in the University of Victoria history department.

"Within a few years, the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. will have 20,000 deliverable intercontinental nuclear warheads," Epstein said.

"Already the U.S. has enough nuclear warheads to drop 50 of them on every city in Russia. What the devil is happening? It's international sophisticated insanity. There's no other word for it."

The arms race is one of the two main problems the United Nations must deal with, he said, and it is directly related to the other main problem of international poverty.

A cold war between the rich and poor nations of North and South may be looming as a replacement for the East-West cold war, Epstein fears.

"And if that happens we're going to be in for a terrible time.

"As the gap between the rich and the poor widens, one day the masses of the poor may rise up in anger. India already has the nuclear weapon, and who knows who will be next?"

If more countries develop these weapons, he said, the possibility increases that disaster will happen "by accident or miscalculation or sheer madness."

And the less powerful nations are not likely to abandon their move toward nuclear weapons as long as the big powers continue their own proliferation of armaments, he added.

In the meantime, more than $250 billion is spent each year on an increasing military strength "and it keeps going up no matter whether there's hot war, cold war or detente.

"I don't know how the world will ever deal with the problems of poverty or pollution as long as this spending on the military continues."

"If we don't solve this problem, there is reason to have very, very grave doubts about our future," Epstein said.

The only solution, he suggested, is "the long slow process of educating people and building a force of public opinion working for disarmament."

Epstein, a 62-year-old Calgary native, continues to work on a part-time basis at the UN as special consultant on disarmament to the secretary-general.

The arms control course he is teaching at UVic is the first of its kind in Canada.

Spain reduces oil supplies

MADRID (Reuter) — Spanish Finance Minister Antonio Barrera de Irimo, in an effort to curb inflation, announced a 20-per-cent reduction in oil supplies for domestic use. Industry would get 90 per cent of its 1974 consumption at the same price, but further supplies would be more expensive.

Homes and offices will be kept at 68 degrees, television viewing hours reduced, theatres and nightclubs closed earlier and street lighting reduced.

Famous church razed by fire

WINNIPEG (CP) — A two-alarm fire has turned one of Winnipeg's most famous churches into a burnt, empty shell. The fire at Elim Chapel on Portage Avenue not far from the downtown business district was brought under control Saturday, but fire officials said it could be another day or two before the flames are completely extinguished.

Canadian envoy takes up post

SAIGON (AFP) — Godfrey Lewis, new Canadian amabassador to South Vietnam, presented his credentials to President Nguyen Van Thieu. He takes over from George Riddell who became Canada's first ambassador to Saigon a year ago.

Ex-Nanaimo junior grabs B.C. Open title

By RAY KERR
Colonist Chess Writer

Another B.C. Open chess championships has come and gone and another tremendous achievement has been chalked up for Vancouver Island chess.

Former Nanaimo junior Brian McLaren, who learned all his early moves on the Island, provided a sort of an upset by winning the tournament with a score of 5½-½, five wins and a draw.

He had to do it the hard way by defeating Toronto visitor Bob Kiviaho in the final round, with Kiviaho entering the big game with a perfect, 5-0 score.

The loss relegated Kiviaho into a four-way tie for second place with Joseph Oszvald of Vancouver; Brian Nickoloff, another Toronto visitor, and Chris Jones of Vancouver, another former Nanaimo ace who moved to the Lower Mainland about the same time as McLaren.

Checkmate

other former Nanaimo ace who moved to the Lower Mainland about the same time as McLaren.

This was the second consecutive major tournament win for McLaren, who had earlier won the Labor Day Open in Victoria.

And it continued the tradition of fine Island successes in the B.C. Open, where Dan Scoones of Victoria tied for first place two years ago, and also posted a strong result in it last year. Scoones could not play in this year's tournament, which for some reason lacked most of the big B.C. chess names.

In class competition, the top prize in B Class went to Maurice Sands of Vancouver, who scored 4½-1½, a strong performance for a player in that category.

In Class C, another mainlander, Robert Short, came first by scoring 4-2, while a real jam developed in Class D, for those rated under 1400 or having no rating at all.

Three Lower Mainlanders all had 3-3 scores for the top prize.

Brian Maranda, who had a rating, and Drago Sandrach and Rod Martinson, both of whom were unrated.

Some of the better Vancouver Island performances were posted by Jeff Reeve of Victoria, who scored 4-2; Darrel Hunt, who has just moved from Victoria to Vancouver, with 3½-2½; Gary Zak of Victoria, also 3½-2½, and Gerry Forbes of Port Alberni, 3-3.

The turnout, due to a mixup in organizing the tourney, was somewhat disappointing, with 55 players showing up. The unrated class was particularly barren, with only five new players appearing on the scene, probably the lowest number in that category in some time.

Games of the Week are interesting for several reasons this week.

First of all, they're printed in larger, easier-to-read type, some of the complaints I've had about the small type in the past.

Secondly, the opening game between Thomas Strothotte and Ken Baker, both of Vancouver, from the B.C. Open, shows how real young players like Strothotte, who's only 16, are quickly coming into their own.

Strothotte, who only a year ago was just a promising junior, was the runner-up in B Class and in this game polishes off Baker, one of the top younger Class A players in the province.

The other interesting point is the second game, where Montreal ace Ken Piasetski disposes of Toronto (former Chicago) master Robert Wachtel, thus giving Piasetski a share of first in an extremely strong Quebec Open championship. Piasetski, Montreal's Kevin Spragett and Toronto's Lawrence Day all scored 5½-½. Wachtel, who had a perfect 5-0 score before meeting Piasetski in the final round, tied for fourth with Canadian champion Peter Biytasas of Vancouver and Toronto expert Victor Dzera, all winning $106 apiece. The winners got $616 each.

Village moved by UN troops

NICOSIA (AP) — United Nations peacekeeping troops completed the transfer of the entire population of a Turkish-Cypriot village from the Greek- to the Turkish-controlled sector of Cyprus. It was the first transfer of its kind since the Aug. 16 ceasefire. The 229 inhabitants of Tohni were taken 50 miles to Nicosia in UN trucks escorted by armored cars.

Silence for tired tourist

PARIS (Reuter) — The weary traveller in France, shaken by the rumble of juggernaut trucks outside his hotel window, can come out from under his pillow.

The cure for his insomnia is to be found in A Guide to Silent Hotels, lovingly compiled by a fervent anti-noise crusader who has ferreted out 1,000 havens of peace and quiet in both town and countryside.

The visitor to France, equipepd with the slim paperback guide by medical publisher Etienne Garet, is at last assured of a good night's rest.

Garet, who publishes a series of medical reviews and also a gastronomic guide for doctors, first had his brainwave when vacationing in Spain as a bachelor.

He complained: "Hoteliers don't like bachelors and they put me in the worst room next to a creaky elevator. I came back from that holiday determined to compile a list of silent hotels at home."

How to cut your holiday costs without cutting corners.

With the cost of so many things going out of sight, a winter holiday is a bigger decision than ever. So what are your choices?
1. You can decide not to go. But is that a solution? A lot of people are saying: "We're going; we need the break". Amen.
2. You can go for quality at any cost—if money's no object.
3. You can settle for the lowest price you can find. And hope for the best.
4. You can go Sunflight—for a combination of high quality and low price that's unbeatable. Some facts:
First, price.
If you buy more, you can buy for less. At Sunflight, we buy more hotel beds—in more resorts—than anybody else in Canada. It's the same with aircraft. Because we contract for thousands of seats at a time, a seat on one of our charter flights costs less than a seat on a regular airline flight. Much less.

Now, where would you like to go?
Fly from Victoria to Honolulu by Sunflight private jet

Honolulu	15 nights from $429	Maui apartment	15 nights from $549
Plus, from Vancouver
Honolulu	10 nights from $359	Mazatlan	14 nights from $339
Puerto Vallarta includes breakfast & dinner	14 nights from $399	Tahiti & Fiji Moorea/Tahiti & Fiji	14 nights from $1,039
San Diego 5 nights San Diego, 2 nights Anaheim (Disneyland)	7 nights from $279	California fly/drive includes car and hotels	7 nights from $319
Fiji Nandi/Suva & Coral Coast	15 nights from $839	Fiji & Hawaii	19 nights from $949
Tahiti	12 nights from $989

14-night holidays availble to most resorts. Prices are per person, 2 people per room, and include air fare, hotel and other features shown in Sunflight brochure. Service charges, taxes and most meals extra. Prices higher for some departures. When mandatory service charges and taxes are payable at destination, they are published in the brochure. Sunflight private charter flights to Mazatlan and Hawaii via Wardair 747 jumbo jet, Puerto Vallarta via Pacific Western Airlines.

Now for quality.
We charter sleek modern jets from Canadian airlines. Every hotel we use is inspected inside-out by our travel experts—so you're not buying a pig in a poke. We serve free cocktails, wines and liqueurs, as well as fine food, on most of our flights. We have our representatives at the airport here, the airport there, and available at your hotel. Just in case you should need them.
Now that's service.
The clinching argument is choice. Whatever kind of holiday you're looking for, chances are we've got it. We offer luxury resort hotels. Or less lavish hotels. Or apartments where you can cook for yourself. You can go for one, two, or three weeks. Most any week you want to go.

The other half of holiday planning.
Bonus savings: When you're really determined to save for your holiday, a Royal Bank Bonus Savings account is ideal. With its high interest rate, your savings will increase faster than you'd think.
Holiday loans: A life-insured Royal Bank Termplan loan can help you take that really special holiday.
Chargex: A Royal Bank Chargex card can cover unexpected expenses almost anywhere in the world.
Travellers cheques: They're available at any Royal Bank branch, readily cashable almost everywhere, and easily replaceable if lost or stolen. But don't forget to change some Canadian dollars for the local currency before you leave—for those little extras when you first arrive.
Most Travelplan services, including safe deposit boxes, are part of Royal Certified Service. And that's a happy holiday thought. Because for a low monthly charge, Royal Certified Service can help reduce the service charges that seem to mount up so quickly. Pick up your application at any Royal Bank Branch.
ROYAL BANK travelplan

Now that's choice!
With Sunflight, you can get a custom-crafted holiday—at off-the-rack prices. From our biased viewpoint, you'd be crazy to go any other way!
P.S. All Sunflight holidays—those above and more besides—are in our fat, full-colour brochure. Pick one up at a travel agent or any branch of the Royal Bank.
What to do now? See a travel agent.

'Sconto' a magic word

By STAN DELAPLANE

ROME — We came off a Greek cruise ship into Rome during a spaghetti strike — which gives you an idea how crazy things are here. Inflation, 20 percent this year. No sign that the eternal strikes will cease in the Eternal City for the Holy Year.

Hotels booked up by tours. Spilling over into suburban towns.

Great looking city still — I'd come here for the fountains alone. The art of the Renaissance poured into Rome. You find it at every turn of a narrow street. It stands splendidly in a grand piazza.

A good shopping town despite inflation. Italian workmanship in silver, clothing, leather, jewelry has a lot of flair.

The most important word for you to remember is "sconto." Discount. You say "sconto" and hold out your hand imperiously. Look them in the eye fiercly. "Sconto!"

They SAY they won't do it. "Why, it's laughable. We NEVER give discounts."

But they do. Oh yes, they eye fiercely. "Sconto!"

"Can we get room and board in Florence, Italy? Something inexpensive?"

A joy of Italy: There are room-and-board — called pensiones — everywhere. Even in Rome — I hear fine things about the Pensione Texas in Rome. In Florence we tried for Pensione Alesandra on Borgo SS Apostoli 17. Filled. So we got the Pensione Edelweiss on Via Vosimo Rifolfi. Cost $5 a night for a big room, shower and lots of heat. Rare to get a heated room in Italy.

Best working guide to Rome is Pan Am's "Insider's Rome." A thick pack of 50 separate cards: Shopping. Walks. Tours and so on. Mine is marked $4.95. It's worth it. You just pull out the cards you want for that day and put them in your pocket.

"Should we bargain to get discounts in Mexico?"

In the Indian markets and on the street, absolutely. Not in the department stores because they won't do it. The clerk doesn't give a hoot whether you buy or not. In fact, he wishes you'd go away and quit bothering him.

I've been told that the tourist shops no longer bargain — that's the story. But they do. They did with me. I think all shops selling tourist items will give a little on the asking price — all over the world.

In Mexico you must have a small shop where you deal with the owner — who has something to gain — not a clerk. In the Orient (except Japan) the clerk can make the discount. He's on a commission and he's the one who marked up the item in the first place.

Also true in France, Spain, Italy, Greece. The owner sets the lowest price on the item. Gives a higher suggested sales price to the clerk to cover the commission. Then it's up to the clerk — to come down and, if so, how much Doesn't work that way in Britain, Ireland, Germany and the Scandivavian countries. But in small papamam antique shops in English country villages, the owners don't really have a fixed price. Antiques can be argued anywhere in the world. Who knows the actual dollar value?

"We are thinking of buying a second-hand car to drive in Europe. How reliable are they?"

I'd say as reliable as what you'd buy here. No more, no less. But if you buy a used car in Paris, what do you do in Yugoslavia when the mechanic tells you the transmission is filled with sawdust?

Sometimes the American Embassy will tell you about reliable firms. Sometimes — if you find a nice guy. But generally, these people are very stiff. You see those kind of faces over a poker table. They do the job according to the book and wait for the Foreign Service pension.

Paintings top theme

BY LESLIE DREW
Colonist Staff

The post office's choice of paintings for the Christmas issue due on Friday brings to mind a recent survey of thematic popularity done by a West German philatelist.

He analysed 2,000 thematic stamps issued by post offices around the world in the latter part of 1973, and grouped them thematically.

Paintings were well in the lead, accounting for 304 stamps. The others: famous personalities, 221; plants, 161; animals, 142; sports, 137; Christmas, 134; folklore, 128; ships, 107; space exploration, 106; landscapes, 104; art, 96 and religion, 63.

STAMP PACKET

A reader tells me that Robert C. Todd's painting The Ice Cone, Montmorency Falls, which will appear on the 10-cent of the Christmas issue, has been illustrated before — on carriage labels of Kaulbach Island off the Nova Scotian coast. The island, he says, has permission to issue the labels for mail transported between it and the N.S. mainland, the only such instance in Canada, and has been issuing the labels since 1970. The Ice Cone, well reproduced, came out last year.

A collector of Canadian stamps, Mrs. Joe Chapman of 6-4061 Larchwood, Gordon Head, wonders about a defective copy of the bicycle stamp which showed up on a letter she received. The numeral 8 looks like a 3, here are four notches out of the black tire section of the wheel, and the red cyclist's leg is not attached to his body. I checked over a few used copies of my own and found one with indistinct lettering on the six lines of lettering at the right, and a defective 8, which could be uneven printing. The first thing that comes to mind, of course, is rubbing on used copies. So far, I haven't heard of any constant varieties on this stamp.

Next stamp in the Canadian post office's multicultural series comes out Nov. 15 — an 8-cent commemorating the centennial of the birth of Marconi which features a portrait of him combined with a view of St. John's harbor from Signal Hill, the site he chose for the first trans atlantic wireless receiver in 1901. Designed by John B. Boyle, the stamp comes in four-color lithography, and the printing will again be 28 million.

Somass tyee eggs used in seeding program

alec merriman

Federal fisheries workers are attempting to introduce a new run of chinook salmon into the Somass River system in the Alberni Valley.

Whether they will be the big 30 to 60-pound tyee, for which the Alberni Inlet and Somass system is famous, is the big question mark, and fisheries officials won't speculate.

"We hope to introduce a run of chinook to Robertson Creek," hatchery manager Karl Petersen told me last weekend.

He said the run would supplement the runs already in the Somass system, which now stand at a healthy average of 15,000 chinooks a year. . . . a great many of them tyee.

But Petersen wouldn't go out on a limb. He explained the size depends upon which year the chinooks return to the river — as two-year-old jacks, or three, four or five-year-old chinooks.

He did say the eggs from chinook salmon in the Somass are bigger than chinook eggs from other rivers and that he can put chinook smolts back into the river bigger and in less time than from any other hatchery.

It is mainly from the Somass tyee salmon that eggs are being taken to serve the six million egg-capacity hatchery now established at Robertson Creek in the same facilities which were used in the abortive attempt some years ago to introduce a pink salmon fishery to the west coast, particularly Alberni Inlet.

That facility failed, although for the first two or three years it looked like it would be a success. But biologists now know much more about hatching and rearing fish than they did then.

No one knows for sure why the pink experiment failed, but it might be for the same reason the chinook introduction could be a big success — water temperature.

Robertson Creek, which flows into the Stamp River from Great Central Lake, is unusually warm. Pink salmon spawn early in the season and the water may have been too warm for them to enter the creek when they were ripe for spawning.

But, the chinook salmon come later in the season when the water is cooler. The same warmer water conditions may be part of the reason the fry grow faster into big smolts.

The eggs that are now being taken from the chinooks and placed in hatching trays will be hatched by January and ponded by April.

Before release a portion of the output will be tagged with wire markers and will have their adipose fin clipped. Then they will be part of the fisheries head recovery program to trace migration habits of the fish.

The chinook for the Robertson Creek experiment are being trapped at the fishways at Stamp River Falls and we watched fisheries worker Des Morris counting the fish and selecting the chinooks to be transported to the Robinson Creek hatchery.

Morris is a commercial fisherman, director for the Pacific Trollers' Association in the Albernis. He works voluntarily on fish projects and this year has been employed as guardian at the Stamp Falls fishway.

Petersen explained that great care is being taken not to upset the wild spawning salmon of the Stamp River. Only a certain percentage are being trapped at the fishway. The rest are being released to swim to their natural spawning beds. Up until last weekend they had 150 females for the hatchery and they hoped for 500 this year.

That would provide two million eggs and a 90 per cent survival could be expected. That compares to 10 to 20 per cent survival expectation under natural wild conditions. A further loss of five per cent could be expected while fry are rearing.

Which all adds up to pretty fantastic production gains under hatchery conditions.

In 1973 there were two million eggs planted in the Robertson Creek hatchery, its first year of operation for chinooks.

In 1972 there were 1½ million eggs hatched.

By 1977 Petersen expects to be in the full six million capacity production and the eggs taken in 1977 should be from the chinooks that were hatched in the Robertson returning to the river of their birth.

By 1978 the hatchery should be releasing five million chinook smilts into the Somass system to go to sea and serve the sports and commercial fishery.

But, Petersen believes the hatchery production will be continued at peak production, with its big benefit of 90 per cent survival.

Jacks from the 1972 hatching program have been returning to Robertson Creek on their own this fall, indicating the project is on the way to success.

Next year should see some bigger three-year-olds returning. But 1977 will be the year of reckoning. Then it will be determined if the big females return as five-year-old tyee salmon, or whether the hatched fish will revert back four-year-old smaller chinooks.

Petersen says some coho have been using the old Robertson Creek spawning channels, but he hasn't seen a pink salmon in the maternity wards for two years.

Sunday we stood on the edge of the Robertson Creek holding pond and watched about 60 big 30 to 50-pound tyee salmon swimming around as they ripened towards the time Petersen and his helper, George Dearle, will strip the females of their eggs and then fertilize them with the male milt. One male will supply sperm for several females.

The Robertson Creek project has been renovated to include the small hatchery for six million eggs, 16, 10-foot tanks for rearing, and the use of the holding pond for ripening fish. The old viewing pond with its picture window for watching fish is being used for holding male chinooks.

The system of maternity ward rearing and spawning channels once used for pinks, now remain unused except for a few coho. But when the chinook hatchery is in full production after its first five-year cycle (in 1977) the whole project may be revitalized.

Our 31-day South Seas cruise:
A better way to celebrate
Christmas and New Year's.
SS MONTEREY sails from Honolulu Dec. 9.

And there's still time to plan it!

You'll be far from the rush and crush at home while you cruise over 10,000 miles of the beautiful Pacific, surrounded by an ocean of peace and contentment.

From Hawaii you'll set sail for ports of call that read from the pages of Captain Cook's log: Moorea, Tahiti, Rarotonga. New Zealand! Australia. Fiji. Niuafo'ou and Pago Pago.

Spend generous sun days at sea, where you'll enjoy the sea life made famous by our extra special care and luxury service. And celebrate the holidays in the friendly atmosphere of our hometown hospitality and Polynesian spirit.

The SS MONTEREY is renowned for the kind of cuisine, service, accommodations and entertainment Americans love best. Registered in the United States, this famous ship is small enough to offer an intimate atmosphere, yet big enough to have everything an all first-class ship should have.

If you have a little more time, you can board the ship in California a week earlier for a 43-day round-trip cruise. Other 31-day cruises this winter depart from Honolulu Jan. 8, Feb. 10 and Mar. 20.

There's room for you! And your travel agent can send you on your way.

Happy Holidays!

Spilker tunes pipes while Richard Uhl works console

Church organ rebuilt

By DON GAIN
Colonist Reporter

Work is being completed on the rebuilding of the organ at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church which has been redesigned by Hugo Spilker, Victoria organ builder.

The rebuilt organ will be dedicated by the church's minister, Rev. Bruce Molloy, at a recital at 8 p.m. Monday.

The recital, by church organist Richard Proudman who has been working in consultation with Spilker, will also be one of the celebrations of the 100th anniversary of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Guests artists Arthur Wiebe, tenor, and Juliet Proudman on trumpet will also take part.

Proudman said this week that Spilker has brought the organ up to present-day tonal standards.

It was originally an old mechanical tracker with Gothic casework when it was brought to the old St. Andrew's Church in the last century then moved to the present church, which was built in 1891.

Around 1900, according to Proudman, the organ proved troublesome and was given a pneumatic action. Two stops were added in the 1930s which still are in use.

In 1951 the T. Eaton Company electrified the organ completely and added a three-manual console.

Spilker worked on the organ in 1956, cleaning it and re-organizing the pipework, elevating pipes "so they could speak properly into the church," Proudman said.

This year "with the major tonal work completed and considerable additions to the controls at the console," Proudman said, "the organ will rank as one of Victoria's finer installations."

He said the most noticeable feature is the building of a small cantilevered casework containing two new ranks of pipes enabling both choir and soloist to hear the instrument more clearly. Several other new stops include a fine pedal reed, a new trumpet and a Cymbelstern, the latter a gift of a private donor.

Chuck it out after blooming

By GRANIA LITWIN
Colonist Reporter

It is almost poinsettia time.

In two or three weeks local garden shops, corner stores with the exotic flower which has come to be associated with Christmas.

Then comes the rub — How to care for the plant which florists and gardeners have conflicting ideas about.

Should the flower be wartered daily or weekly? Does it like sun or shade? How to keep it for next year and make it bloom again?

For these questions and more, The Colonist found answers from the foreman of Sidney Research Station, a specialist in greenhouse plants working under director Henry Andison.

Sam Arrowsmith, a straightforward man, had a joke first which illustrated how many inquiries the station receives about how to keep poinsettias.

"My advice is chuck it out after it blooms," he said. It is not worth the frustration.

Despite his remark there are rows and rows of healthy plants in his greenhouse which he has kept from last year.

"One hears a lot of nonsense about poinsettias," said Arrowsmith, "but the most important point to remember is to keep the plant moist and water it from the top of the pot."

"Ideally it should rest at night in a dark room — not a room in which the family sits using electric light."

Some people believe they should be watered just once a week. This is not true, according to the horticulturist, who said the plant can last for many years if treated properly.

Arrowsmith suggested the plant be tipped on its side in February, and placed in indirect light (say, under a workbench) until the middle of July. It should be watered only about once every three weeks at this time.

By the middle of July it is in a dormant stage and the stocks look dead. This is the time to tip it up again, cut it back and begin to water regularly.

After being repotted in a larger pot with sterile soil and fertilizer, new flowers should begin when the days shorten, around the beginning of September.

Anyone who did not re-pot the plants this summer can try it now, said Arrowsmith, but must be sure to retain all root soil in the pot and place new soil carefully around it.

Ring in changes with long skirts and blouses . . .

With the holiday season fast approaching all us gals are starting to think of assembling outfits for our festive hours . . . Do you know that, in terms of styling and fabric, you can be well-dressed for as little as $34 . . . That's what we discovered at Miss Frith's this week! . . . We saw an off-white acrylic knit at just that price . . . and pretty elegant it looked, too, with its ribbed top and sleeves and sleek skirt! . . . Miss Frith's have an unbelievably delightful collection of long dresses in prints, plains, and lurex fabrics which have just the right touch of excitement . . . Polyester fabrics, non-clinging and softly feminine . . . acrylics in the rich, earthy tones which are so much in demand this season . . . But what we want to talk most about is the blouse and skirt combination which is so very versatile . . . We saw a truly fantastic collection of long skirts . . . to team up with frilly blouses or tailored shirts . . . One particularly lovely skirt in wool with a mohair finish has zig-zag designs on a red ground . . . another stunner in that looks like lace thread design over a woven fabric, shades down from off-white to coffee brown and light to dark green . . . this one looked gorgeous topped with a dark green Qiana tailored blouse. No way we can describe all these lovelies here . . . so go see them yourself at . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1919 Douglas St., 383-7181.

A new fad in pop jewellery in San Francisco . . . flea collars for people . . . just like Fido's!

Blanket cloth coats are both warm and chic . . .

Well, all we can say after viewing Wilson's fall collection of topcoats is that there's a style and fabric to suit every taste . . . and what's more, whichever style and fabric you do choose you'll be right in the swing, fasion-wise! . . . However, this week we'd like to dwell a bit on the blanket cloth type coats which have been arriving in good numbers over the last little while . . . and are just the thing for the woman who prefers a plain solid color in her coat . . . plus warmth and lack of too much bulk in texture . . . To describe just a sampling of these all-wool topcoats . . . there's a double-breasted beige with nice detailing . . . the sort of coat which would lend itself well to the addition of a fur collar if you have one . . . There are English coats of 100% wool . . . colors like navy, beige, black, winter white, red, and camel . . . Some have raglan sleeves . . . There are wraparounds . . . Coats with and without belts . . . Styles both single and double breasted . . . The tone-on-tone coats are extremely smart to our way of thinking . . . There's a black with red stitching and red facing down the front and under the small neck-hugging collar . . . Red rimmed black buttons and a narrow patent belt with this . . . Another black coat is double-faced wool . . . black on the outside, red inside . . . with just enough red showing to make it interesting . . . A lovely forest green coat, and another in the darker bottle green . . . W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 598-2821.

The wrong accessories can ruin the most beautiful dress. The right ones can make a quite ordinary dress look special.

Gifts like you've never seen before! . . .

You know, there's been a noticeable change in the gift center of Standard Furniture's Import Shop . . . You'll find quite a lot of things here you don't usually find around town . . . and that's because while Standard has always been a leader in accessories, and started off importing fun things from all over . . . other stores got on the band wagon too . . . so now Standard decided a change was necessary and have started up-grading their quality in gift items and accessories, and are stocking things no one else has even heard of! . . . Like the little figurines with faces which are really containers for spices or all manner of other things, depending on their size . . . And the Swedish glass! You should just see all the gorgeous shapes . . . lovely man-size beer mugs . . . a really beautiful ice bucket of remarkable design and clarity . . . Very attractive candleholders of sculptured glass . . . Big and little bowls by Kosta of Sweden . . . A very unusual frosted glass bowl for fruit or what-have-you . . . Flower vases with their own built-in flower holders . . . So many other things one could spend half a day just browsing and admiring! . . . But this we do say now: Those of you looking for that "special" gift obtainable nowhere else . . . need seek no further than Standard's Import Shop . . . And these new things are just a sample of what they're getting in for Christmas! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Large and small tweeds, mainly in evergreen and golden tones, are the favorite fabrics of Spanish designer Lino of Madrid.

Choose a Sunflight tour this time . . .

Having been on several Sundlight holiday tours ourselves, we're a bit of a nut about Suntours . . . they're just so perfect in every way . . . So when Paulin's unpacked a carton full of new brochures for the fall and winter Suntour holidays the other day, we could hardly wait to get our hands on one! This year Suntours will take you to Fiji, Tahiti, Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta, San Diego, Canary Islands, Costa del Sol, Spain, Portugal and Morocco . . . and of course, Hawaii . . . and in connection with this latter destination, there are tours . . . staying at a variety of good hotels . . . direct from Victoria, instead of having to cross to Vancouver where most of the tours originate . . . There's just so much in these brochures that we're going to advise you to pick one up and read it yourself . . . You'll find that wherever you choose to go, there's a good variety of first rate hotels to suit your pocketbook . . . In many cases means are included . . . and all kinds of sightseeing and touring by motorcoach . . . As we said, we've been on Sunflight tours ourselves, and there's no question in our minds that they offer excellent value for our travel dollar . . . We've seen a lot we probably would never have seen had we travelled independently . . . and we've met a lot of charming people along the way . . . If you're looking for a good holiday this winter, give serious consideration to a Sunflight tour . . . Drop in and get all the dope from . . . Paulin Travel, 1006 Government St., 382-9168.

Geoffrey Beane put 36 gores on a daytime dress, 37 yds. of silk chiffon in a long evening dress.

You'll seldom see bedspreads like these! . . .

This week we bought ourself a long vest called a "tabard" at the Welsh Hand Loom and it looks just great with our slacks and tailored shirt . . . at least that's what everyone is telling us! . . . "Wherever did you find it?" virtual strangers enquire! . . . It's a fact, though . . . the pure wool double-woven tapestry garments made in Wales and sold exclusively at the Welsh Hand Loom are completely unique and handsome . . . While we were waiting for a lady ahead of us to be served the other day we caught sight of the single and double bedspreads, which somehow we'd missed on previous visits . . . These are tapestry too . . . completely reversible like green on one side, blue on the other, for example . . . Other color combinations include blues, greens, greys, beiges and browns . . . There's a deep fringe all around . . . and quite honestly, we've never seen bedspreads we consider more sturdy, more versatile (remember they're reversible giving two quite different looks.) . . . and mention prettier! . . . 100% pure wool, closely woven . . . (we think the browns and beiges would be especially good in a masculine room!) . . . Any colors not on hand can be ordered directly from Wales and should be here in a matter of weeks! . . . Welsh Hand Loom, Nootka Court, 634 Humboldt St., 384-7723.

Trims are important in clothes for this fall and winter.

Glamorous "special" swimsuits . . .

Just because a woman has undergone a mastectomy doesn't mean she daren't show herself around a swimming pool or cavorting in the ocean surf at some balmy resort . . . Not by a long shot! There are swimsuits designed for this very purpose which we swear look no different than any other smart swimsuit on the beach . . . In fact one of the two styles we saw at Surgical Supplies this week is a dead ringer for our own pet bathing suit . . . and we assure you we've nothing to hide! . . . This little beauty is elastized fabric, in either plain navy or a pretty white and light blue floral pattern . . . It has a low back and built-up shoulders . . . form-fitting to hold your prosthesis firmly, and with two extra strips of material which can be attached to the front or around the shoulders if necessary . . . We'd defy anybody to spot this as an especially designed swimsuit! . . . The second one we saw is a soft flowered nylon jersey top with sash belt and little matching panties . . . And talk about versatile! . . . You can wear both pieces for swimming . . . Top by itself can be used as a swimsuit cover-up or as a pant top . . . Pretty ingenious eh? . . . Mind you, we hear that lots of women who haven't had mastectomies are buying these smart swimsuits! . . . Surgical Supplies Ltd., 1012 Broad St., 384-8433.

Want to know how to run your wedding reception? . . .

While we were waiting to chat with Mrs. Robertson, Eaton's knowledgeable bridal consultant, last Monday . . . we heard her giving advice over phone to a bride-to-be, telling her what and how many to order in the way of invitations, serviettes, reply cards, etc. . . . All of which necessities, Eaton's Bridal Registry will procure for you . . . so all you have to do is make you selection, and Eaton's will do the rest . . . Mrs. Robertson tells us she's getting quite a lot of requests these days for guidance on planning wedding receptions . . . everything from the reception at a small home wedding to that at a large formal wedding . . . Without any charge at all . . . even without registering if the bride-to-be is foolish enough to pass up this bonanza . . . Mrs. Robertson or one of her assistance will give you a plan for the reception . . . and we assure you this takes a lot of the pressure off the bride's mother . . . You've really no idea just how very much Eaton's Bridal Registry can and will do for you until you've gone in and talked to them yourself . . . The Gift Preference list is great, of course, because it's so very comprehensive . . . Crystallizes your own thoughts about what you really want . . . and enables your family and friends to choose what they'd like to give you, secure in the knowledge that you really want it! . . . And don't forget to fill in a coupon for your free Bridal Shower Gift Pack . . . over $18 worth of brand-name products . . . and all yours, compliments of . . . Eaton's Bridal Registry, 382-7141, Loc. 373.

Less grease cuts chance of cancer

GENOA, Italy (AFP) — Women can reduce the risk of breast cancer by avoiding greasy food, an Italian specialist said at the 11th world congress on cancer which ended Wednesday.

Japanese women have less breast cancer because their diet is based on vegetable fats rather than animal fats, Prof. Carlo Sirtori told the congress.

He said heavy fats of animal origin form corpuscles on which cancer-forming substances develop more easily.

Sirtori also said that babies can be infected with cancer before they are born by drugs taken by their mothers to guard against the danger of spontaneous abortion.

He said that one of these drugs had been taken by the mothers of 158 children who developed cancer of the genitals between the age of 15 and 20.

Smoking by pregnant women is a possible cancer hazard for their babies, Sirtori added. Nicotine is one of 30 cancer-ogenic substances that can reach a fetus through the placenta during pregnancy.

Canada rejects U.S. complaint

OTTAWA (UPI) — Canada has rejected a U.S. charge that its beef quota on imports from the United States was "highly restrictive" and accused the Americans of bungling in their own market.

METRICATION IT'S COMING

Fourth of ten columns on metric conversion created by Camosun College to help readers "think metric" by the final conversion deadline of 1980

Once upon a time (actually in the fall of 1974) there were two people, Al and Sue, who worked together. Al, often called "the boss" sat in his office behind a big desk. Sue sat with her typewriter outside Al's office and was most often called "his secretary."

One day Al heard at lunch that Canada was "going metric." Al really didn't know what that meant in business terms, so he asked Sue. She was to tell him (for she had taken a short course at Camosun College on metrication and, generally speaking, was often known for being ahead of the time).

Some of the things Sue told Al were:

- By 1980 Canada will have completed the switch to metric measurements;
- That virtually every business and industry will be affected by the change;
- That national committees are working with representatives from every aspect of business and industry in Canada to facilitate and co-ordinate the change.

"Wait a minute," pleaded Al. "That's all well and good, but how is metrication going to affect us?"

"Well," said Sue, "first off you'll have to adopt metric measurement as a way of thinking. When you place orders it's no more feet, pounds and quarts. And our company invoices will be sent out in metric units. We'll probably want to use metric stationery and envelopes and . . ."

Al's very audible groan cut Su short. "How am I going to cope with all this change?" exclaimed Al. "Is it going to be worth it?"

Sue contemplated her boss for a moment. "Worth it? The experience of those countries who have converted to metric have shown that businesses have benefitted financially and secretaries like me love the ease of using metric units."

"But what about me," asked Al.

"Well, at the time of each major change," replied Sue, "there will be extensive educational and information programs for people like you and me. Camosun College will be offering courses and workshops as needed by the business community. They will even design courses to meet the specific needs of our company staff."

Al was so relieved to hear that the change to metrication was being done with guys like him in mind that he decided to help the process along.

"Sue," he said very firmly, "from now on all letters from this office will be typed on A4 metric size paper and mailed in DL envelopes." (If you don't know about Al and DL envelopes ask Sue or better yet call Camosun and register for a metric course.)

Oh yes. Al and Sue worked very happily together through the change to metrication, but in 1980 . . . but that's another story!

Metrice Measurement — Capacity

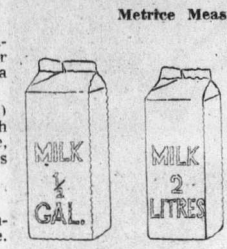
Litre is the metric measurement for capacity or the liquid content of a container.

Litres (abbreviated l) are used to measure such things as milk, gasoline, paint and large quantities of water.

For example:

$5.00 will buy approximately 36 litres of gasoline.

A 6 cup teapot holds about one litre.



One gallon

We're basically nice people

By MERLE ELLIS

Basically, butchers are nice people. I sometimes wonder if we haven't each and all had, at one point along the line, some brief moment of mental lapse, which accounts for our becoming what we are. But we are, nonetheless, basically nice people. Warm, friendly, courteous (at times a little fresh, perhaps) and, most importantly, helpful.

Your butcher has the knowledge and is in the position to give you a lot of good advice on how to eat better for less if you will only ask. Don't be afraid to ring the bell, if you have to, to talk to the butcher fact to face.

When you ask your friendly butcher for assistance in stretching your food dollar, you must understand that in spite of being griped at, boycotted and generally bombarded with abuse for the better half of 1973, and trying (as we all are) to make a living under some rather rough economic circumstances so far this year, he is not being facetious when he suggests you stuff the piece of meat he hands you.

What he is offering is an almost magic method of making all manner of meat go much, much further. There are dozens of cuts of meat that can be effectively stuffed with an appropriate dressing and appropriately dressed with an effective sauce — much to the bentfit of both palate and pocket.

Ham, ram, zip, zam, bull, beef and buffalo are all, or almost all, excellent for stuffing; so are the more familiar beef round, rock cod, breast of chicken, veal, lamb and capon. But if all the stuffable possibilitits available in your butcher's meat case, the most money saving potential, particularly at this time of year, is likely to be the bottom round or rump roast.

Both the rump and bottom round are solid muscles and both are, by nature, a little on the tough side. Normally, that would be a disadvantage, but when you're planning on stuffing, those qualities are definitely desirable. There are hundreds of good recipes for roulades or beef rolls, but the one that has become a favorite in my family is this very simple one:

6 ¼-in. slices beef rump
6 tsp. prepared mustard
1 onion, peeled, cut in 6 wedges
3 slices bacon, cut in half
1 large dill pickle, cut in 6 wedges
1 carrot, chopped
1 stalk celery, chopped
½ cup flour
Salt, pepper to taste
3 T. cooking oil
1 12-oz. bottle beer
Arrowroot, cold water

Trim any excess fat from meat. With a mallet or rolling pin, pound each piece of meat a few good whacks to make it good and thin.

Spread each piece with a teaspoon of mustard. Near one edge of each piece, place a strip of bacon, a wedge of onion and a piece of pickle. Roll up jellyroll fashion, secure with toothpicks and lace with string.

Put flour, salt and pepper in a bag. Add meat rolls, two or three at a time, and shake, coating well.

Heat oil in a heavy skillet or electric grying pan over moderate heat until it begins to sputter. Add the floured meat rolls and brown well on all sides. Reduce heat to low, add celery, carrots and half the beer. Cover and simmer for about 1½ hours, until tender. Turn the rolls once or twice during cooking and add more beer, if needed. If you've drunk it, don't worry — use water.

Remove rolls to a warm platter. Remove toothpicks and string. Strain the cooking liquid and return it to the pan over high heat. Thicken with a little arrowroot dissolved in water; cook until bubbling. Pour sauce over meat rolls and serve.

This dish is good with boiled potatoes and sauteed red cabbage. Freeze any leftover beef rolls in their sauce. They are every bit as good, perhaps better, the second time around.

Woman driver meeting Hydro

Penny Harding will meet this week with B.C. Hydro officials to find out why they won't hire her as a bus driver. The meeting was arranged by a provincial human rights officer, who will also attend the meeting.

Ms. Harding claims she was denied a driving job although she has four years of bus-driving experience, while inexperienced men were hired.

Treats youngsters will enjoy

Halloween, the annual celebration of All Hallows Eve, with the trick or treat custom youngsters enjoy, resembles centuries-old traditions.

As the story goes, Irish peasants would go from house to house demanding goods for the holiday festivities. When the custom emigrated to North America in the late 1800s, along came the spooky figures associated in Ireland with All Hallows Eve — the fitches on broomsticks, black cats, apples that bob, and masks.

Today, after the neighborhood children call in their fancy costumes, Halloween hosts can treat their returning goblins to easy-to-prepare goodies made right at home.

Here are some ideas for Thursday night:

HOBGOBLIN BURGERS
Makes 6 servings)

1½ pounds ground beef
1 tablespoon sweet pickle liquid
6 slices pasteurized processed cheese
6 slices bacon, cooked

6 hamburger buns, split
Lettuce, shredded
Catsup dressing (see footnote)
6 tomato slices
2-3 cup sweet cucumber pickles
12 pimiento slices
12 dried apricot halves
12 dark seedless raisins
3 radishes, halved lengthwise
Toothpicks

Combine beef and sweet pickle liquid; shape into 12 four-inch patties. On each of 6 patties, place 1 slice of cheese and 1 slice of slightly crumbled bacon. Top with remaining patties; seal edges very well. Broil approximately 4 inches from heat source 6 to 8 minutes, turning once.

To Assemble Each Hamburger: Place in layers on bun half — lettuce, hamburger, catsup dressing*, 1 tomato slice, 3 cucumber pickles. Top with remaining bun half.

To Make Each Hobgoblin Face: Turn burger over so bottom of bun is up. Assemble face: use 2 pimento slices for eyebrows, 2 dried apricots and 2 raisins for eyes, radish piece (cut into diamond shape) for nose and one gherkin for mouth; secure with toothpicks, if needed. To serve, place each "hobgoblin" on a individual plate; remove any toothpicks.

*Catsup dressing: In small bowl combine 1½ tablespoons mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon catsup and ¼ teaspoon sugar; blend thoroughly.

ICE CREAM WITCHES
(Makes 6 cones)

¼ cup shredded cocnut
Green food color
Blue food color
6 canned apricot halves
Red licorice
1 quart vanilla ice cream
6 paper muffin baking cups
Chocolate chips
Candy corn
6 sugar cones

In plastic bag, combine 2 tablespoons of cocoanut and 2 to 3 drops of green food color; shake vigorously until all coconut is colored. Repeat with remaining coconut and blue food color. Cut each apricot half into 2 pieces. Cut licorice into 1½ inch pieces.

To Make One "Witch": Scoop ice cream onto paper muffin baking cup. Quickly decorate using coconut and 2 apricot pieces for hair, 2 chocolate chips for eyes, candy corn for nose and 1 piece licorice for mouth; top with sugar cone for hat. Store in freezer until serving time. Repeat, making 5 more "witches".

erma bombeck

You'll never believe this, but I'm an English major who used to sit around and break out in a rash when I read Willa Cather.

When I married, I vowed that no matter how busy I got, how involved with the children I became, and how menial the tasks I performed about the house, I could always escape by reading essays, poetry and the words of Plato and Shakespeare.

When my son asked me the other day if I had been "The Scarlet Letter" laying around I said, "Lord, you know how the postal service is. Someone probably forgot to put a zip on it."

I can't put my finger on the exact day my mind began to deteriorate, but I think it was the weekend I was in bed with flu, my husband was watching a replay of the 1936 World Series and my youngest literally dragged me all the way down the hall, pointed to the commode and said, "Something's wrong with the lid. It's down."

At any rate, all I know is that I took a quiz in a literary magazine this week, in which you were supposed to complete the quote, and came up with these answers.

A PENNY SAVED IS . . . a penny swallowed by your preschooler that is better forgotten as it isn't covered by your insurance plan.

YOU CAN'T MAKE A SILK PURSE . . . Lonny, or you are going to get yourself kicked out of Bachelor Survival class.

I WOULDN'T BE IN HIS SHOES . . . because one is on the roof and the other is in a boot I gave to the Salvation Army.

PETER PIPER PICKED . . . the wrong house if he expects me to put those things in the freezer.

WHO STEALS MY PURSE STEALS . . . 13 pounds of credit cards, two volumes of snapshots and a sick hamster in a matchbox and it serves him right.

HE AIN'T HEAVY . . . he's an 85-pound puppy named Moe with papers (today's edition) that a kid down the street sold me for $1.50.

THE MEEK WILL INHERIT . . . Howard Cosell for another weekend.

WATER WATER EVERYWHERE AND . . . it's time and a half for a Saturday night house call.

I WILL BEAT MY SWORDS INTO PLOWSHARES . . . and clean under that kid's bed if it kills me.

MARRY IN HASTE. REPENT . . . true.

ann landers

Dear Ann Landers: The old virginity bit — to lose or not to lose, that is the question. Here's a word to those jilted, heartsick dames who are sorry they gave in because afterwards all the magic was gone. What about the Puritans who waited for marriage, and THEN all the magic was gone? You don't think magic is real, do you?

Look at the zillions of married couples who are bored silly with each other. I'll bet some of them were virgins 'til the honeymoon — both of 'em! The real reason most guys drop the girl after the "Preview of Coming Attractions" is that some men can't stand the idea that a woman might have just as strong a sex drive as he has or, heavean forbid, know what it's all about. In self-defence, he looks for a shrinking violet, someone he can "teach" and "be in charge of." Such a female is less threatening. In the meantime, the "why did I do it" dolly is agonizing over her guilt because that's how society says she is supposed to repent for her "sins." — A Witness

Dear Witness: You make some valid points, but insofar as the central issue is concerned, the real evidence is on the other side.

And where do I get it? From hundreds of girls who have also been "witnesses." I've had a tremendous number of letters from deflowered teen-agers who wish they had said no — and would give anything if they could turn the clock back.

Dear Ann Landers: Almost everyone has a headache at one time or another, but not my sister-in-law. SHE has "migraines." Last week I asked her, "What's the difference between my headache and your migraine?" She promptly told me that migraine sufferers are members of the intellectual elite and migraine is a disease of the super-intelligent. True or false? — Two Aspirins, Please

Dear Two: False. Migraine if found among patients at every level of intelligence, among people of all types of genetic and environmental backgrounds.

Simma still simmering

Hees comment offends her

By PETER LLOYD

OTTAWA (CP)—Simma Holt is still simmering over what she considers male chauvinist comments hurled at her across the Commons floor.

The new Liberal MP for Vancouver Kingsway had a few unparliamentary remarks of her own as she singled out veteran Progressive Conservatives George Hees and Eldon Woolliams for comments she said they made.

She was particularly bothered by two comments that do not appear in Hansard, which records Commons speeches, but sometimes misses side comments.

Mrs. Holt said in an interview that she was consulting with Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson when Woolliams (Calgary North), speaking on that department's estimates, commented: "I know she's a pretty girl, but pay attention to me."

When Mrs. Holt rose later in the day to complain about the comment, she mentioned the effect on housing of "socialist hordes in British Columbia" at which point she said Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings) interjected: "How do you spell that?"

"He obviously was implying socialist whores," Mrs. Holt said.

Although neither comment appears on the Commons record, Monique Begin (L-Montreal St. Michel) said she heard them both.

"I've never seen anything like it."

Miss Begin said her English is not good enough to allow her to understand the apparent play on words, "but I could see it was a dirty thing."

Neither Woolliams nor Hees could be reached for comment on Mrs. Holt's charge.

Mrs. Holt, a former Vancouver journalist, said the remarks are typical of the jibes sometimes aimed from the Conservative benches at women MPs. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands), the only woman Conservative, was not in the House at the time of the incidents.

Referring to the Munsinger scandal that rocked the Commons in 1966, Mrs. Holt fought back Friday by calling Hees "the aging sex symbol that Gerda Munsinger wasn't impressed with."

"Here's this sex symbol becoming a sexist in his old age," she said of the 64-year-old former trade minister.

Hees was a cabinet minister during the incidents that later became known as the Munsinger sex and security scandal. No wrongdoing on his part was established when a royal commission investigated the incident several years later.

Apologizing for a few of her less restrained adjectives, Mrs. Holt, 52, said she is "not a wild-eyed liberationist."

She was amazed anyone would describe her as a pretty girl, noting that she had told the House Thursday "that I am not here because I am a pretty girl; I am not here because I am an ugly girl."

"Anyone who calls me a pretty girl has got to be out of his mind," she said with a laugh. "His eyesight must be bad too.

"I'm not a girl either. I'm a woman. That just shows how old he is."

Mrs. Holt said the comments "insulted every woman in the House."

"Chauvinism is ignorance; a lot of it is not intended. They just can't think of women having brains."

Noting that as a journalist she worked in a largely male milieu, she emphasized that coarse remarks themselves don't bother her.

"It's just that thinking is so obsolete. Those people don't know that the world has changed and they forget that their wives and mothers were the original liberationists.

"The heckling was so bad I could hardly talk," she said pointing at a copy of Hansard. "But you can't tell it from this."

Santa Claus prepared to answer his letters

HELSINKI (Reuter) — Letters to Santa Claus at his Finnish Lapland address will be answered this year after all.

The post office said last month it could not reply to children's letters this winter because of a staff shortage, but it was announced at the weekend that the Finnish tourist promotion centre would take on this seasonal task.

Santa's traditional residence, Korvatunturi Mountain, received about 15,000 yuletide requests annually from children all over the wirld.

Liberal column

PM's byline ghost-written

OTTAWA (CP) — The Land Era, a small weekly newspaper in Eastern Ontario, hit the streets last week with the by-line of a new writer — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau — displayed on the front page.

A column bearing Trudeau's name, his faintly grinning picture and the headline, "priorities for the 30th parliament," gave a glowing, upbeat account of the main points in the throne speech at the Sept. 30 opening of the parliamentary session.

It wasn't written by Trudeau at all but by employees of the Liberal Party of Canada as part of a new promotional campaign — without paying any advertising bill — to spread the good word about the doings of the Liberal government in Ottawa.

Fred MacDonald, the party's director of special projects, said the Trudeau column is the first in a series which the party will distribute in coming months to about 1,100 Canadian weekly newspapers.

MacDonald said Liberal party functionaries will ghost-write the columns for members of the Trudeau cabinet and mail them out every two weeks or so to news-hungry weeklies across the land.

The idea is to spread laudatory accounts of activities in various government departments to the weekly papers in hopes that they will be reprinted under the bylines of different cabinet members.

The next contribution is a column on Indian affairs, ghost-written by the party researchers for Judd Buchanan, the recently-appointed minister of Indian and Northern Affairs.

MacDonald said the weeklies will eventually receive a column under the byline of every minister in Trudeau's 29-member cabinet.

Some ministers may actually write part or all of their columns before they are distributed, he said. But in most cases the columns will be written at Liberal headquarters and approved by the minister or a member of his staff.

DRINKING TOO MUCH?
WORRIED?
WANT TO QUIT?

If you have a drinking problem you probably won't know. If you do suspect that something is wrong you probably won't admit it.

But it's no secret, you know.

Your family knows it — probably to their sorrow; your friends know it and probably the people you work with and drink with.

Have you been telling other people and yourself that you can hold your liquor — that you can drink a lot and not show it?

It's a lot of nonsense, you know.

Alcohol is a depressant and every drink dulls you a little more to the effect your own behaviour is having on other people. But don't kid yourself that it goes unnoticed It doesn't.

There are a lot of excuses you can use if you suspect that your drinking is getting out of control and you are unwilling to face up to it. Most of them are pretty phoney but they're always there when needed.

"I have always been able to hold my liquor," is one and another is: "Yes, I drink a fair amount — even get a little tight at times. But alcoholism? Don't be silly."

Others: "I never drink until after supper." "I only drink on weekends." "I never take a drink in the morning." "I never take a drink on the job." "All my friends drink, so what can I do?"

There are dozens of them. Make up your own.

But, if you occasionally feel that you are drinking too much then you probably are.

Cut down or, if you can't, and need help call 383-1633. We will respect your privacy.

A Statement of Policy From Mr. Garth Graham
President, Graham Meats Ltd. concerning Beef Prices

TO PURCHASERS OF HOME FREEZER MEATS

Our company has always believed in the policy of offering for sale only selected, government inspected, Grade A steer beef. This is the best quality beef, properly aged, expertly processed and fully guaranteed. Because of this policy we believe we are the largest supplier of home freezer meats in this area.

There are a number of other grades and types of beef animals being advertised and sold including heifers, calfettes (and) cows. Currently, there is a surplus of these animals being marketed and they are consequently priced far below Grade A Steer beef.

We do not personally recommend these types of beef for tenderness and eating quality but because of the low prices available, we believe you should have an opportunity to purchase these grades at a fair price.

Therefore, we are offering the following as a one time only home freezer meat buy. We invite you to check and compare. If you would like more information, please call us at 598-2211 or 477-9541.

Yours truly,
D. Garth Graham

Concrete art

Concrete poetry is an applied visual art. Concrete means it's highly visible, highly graphic in its form. Poetry in this connection delineates the fact that sometimes there is an obvious, sometimes a hidden, and sometimes no message. Concrete poetry is playing around with letters, forming shapes with them until the result satisfies the artist.

As an applied art, concrete poetry is relatively young, a few decades. It was born, almost simultaneously, in Brazil and in Switzerland. Both countries have been known for the excellence of their typography. After the Second World War, Germany became the strongest exponent of concrete poetry with Great Britain close behind.

Canada's foremost concrete poet is bp nichol in Ontario, and Earle Birney in Vancouver has also played around with the medium.

Two basic tools can be employed in composing concrete poetry: the hand and the typewriter. The most elegant results, naturally, are achieved by applying type transfers to paper, but this tends to become an expensive proposition. The concrete poetry patterns on this page were designed by Jurgen Hesse.

Poetry, art exhibit at busy Open Space

erith smith

Open Space continues to be one of downtown Victoria's busier spots, with something going all the time.

At 7:30 p.m. today there's a poetry reading by Toronto poet Penny Chambers.

Opening at 8 p.m. Tuesday is an exhibition of 50 prints by 50 artists from The Netherlands, a mixed group of graphics. Owned by The Netherlands Ministry of Cultural Affairs in The Hague, these works are being opened under the auspices of the consul general of The Netherlands in Vancouver.

At 8 p.m. Friday James Kennedy, of University of Victoria's music department, presents a concert of six centuries of solo wine music, playing various sizes of recorder and flute.

Annual meeting of Theatrebox Society, which schedules events in Open Space, will be held at 8 p.m. Nov. 4.

In addition to usual business and election of officers, there will be an introduction of the society's new artistic director — William Bartlett.

Bartlett has been acting in that capacity on a temporary basis since the retirement of Gene Miller, and was confirmed at a recent directors' meeting.

Officers of the Greater Victoria Music Festival have announced addition of classes to the syllabus for next spring.

Some if these represent division of some school classes into two sections, but others are new, such as 11 classes in Scottish national dance.

A festival spokesman also issued a reminder that deadline for entries in the festival is Jan. 18. This comes relatively quickly after the holiday season, and past experience has shown that some entries may be forgotten amid Christmas and New Year festivities.

An exhibition of Canadian ceramics opens Wednesday in the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, including the work of 16 artists from across Canada. Each displays a strong, independent style, and they are especially grouped to show the potential of clay as an artistic medium.

The exhibition is entitled Fired Sculpture, and will be on view until Nov. 24.

Still at the Art Gallery, Ferne Geller Cone of Seattle will conduct a workshop using knitting in imaginative ways to create sculptural effects. This will go on this Saturday and Sunday.

This week is truly active in the arts.

At the Royal Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Dinah Christie and Tom Kneebone present their evening with Noel Coward and Cole Porter.

Tuesday in McPherson Playhouse the National Dance Company of Senegal offer two performcances, at 6 and 8 p.m.

At 8 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, in the Crystal Ballroom of the Empress Hotel, Victoria's Amity Singers under the direction of Timothy Vernon offer Music, Candlelight and Wine, a varied program by this talented choral group.

Also Wednesday, at 6 and 8:30 p.m. in McPherson Playhouse, the World Adventure Tour film series continues with Mark Twain in Italy, a tale depicting on film and with narrative by film-maker Dick Reddy, Twain's famous journey in Italy in 1867 as described in his book, Innocents Abroad.

Second of UVic's Sunday afternoon concert series is offered at 4 p.m. today in MacLaurin Auditorium, presenting Schoenburg songs, Bach, Debussy and a work by new UVic compser Martin Bartlett.

Finally this week, the Victoria Jazz Society moves to a new club Friday at Duke's Restaurant, 4558 Cordova Bay Road, presenting the Rusty Thompson Quartet.

Wind vital to builder

WORLCOMBE ISLAND, B.C. (CP) — Take the wind out of Peter Kaffka's sails and you'll also turn off his lights and refrigerator.

The sails or blades are on a windmill that provides electricity for the 75-year-old architect's house on Worlcombe island, a mile southwest of Bowen Island in the mouth of British Columbia's Howe Sound.

Kaffka could have had B.C. Hydro power like most folks, but the last quote he got on that service, four years ago, was for $80,000. He hasn't asked for the current rate.

Instead, he read about windmills and shopped around.

He finished up with an Australian rig which cost him $5,000 once it was set up.

Australia has used windmills for the last century to generate power in the outback.

The three six-foot blades and a generator sit on a 12-foot tower on a rock about 100 feet from Kaffka's small house, catching the winds of the sound. Current feeds directly into a storage bank of 20 six-volt batteries and from there to the house.

The batteries serve as backup on the rare days when the sound is without wind.

Moscow music scene

By KING LEE

While memories of my recent visit to Moscow for the Russia-Team Canada '74 hockey series are still fresh, I thought I'd write a little on the music I heard there.

Most of it was what one imagined it would be like, ranging from semi-classical to classical.

But there were some surprises during my 10 days there and, although it isn't exactly thriving, rock music does live there in all its Western decadence.

Dealing with radio first, most of the music heard there was of the lighter vein, not what we would call rock by any stretch of the imagination but bouncy enough to be pleasant.

One of the interesting things on radio in the morning was exercise sessions in which the announcer barked out sequences of calisthenics to piano music.

The only exposure I had to classical music was at the Palace of Congress, a 6,000-seat concert hall where the Bolshoi Ballet performed Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake.

Not having been to a ballet before, I was a little more impressed by the music than the dancing. But there was no doubt that I had seen the best ballet in the world.

The night the tour was treated to a dinner-dance at the Arbat Restaurant was an eye-opener.

There the band was like a mini Glenn Miller orchestra with electric guitar added.

They played some unrecognizable tunes but did it in the modern style, making it quite a nice experience.

The singers who performed during the floor show (and it was a good one by any standards except maybe Las Vegas) were good, doing what was obviously the top "modern" songs of Russia.

Our final three suppers in Moscow were late ones at the Hotel Intourist and here, too, we caught a taste of the night-club atmosphere.

There was no floor show at the Intourist but there was a small band not unlike the rock groups that are around Victoria.

The vocalist there did a couple of Tom Jones and Englebert Humperdinck numbers in English and also did a Russian rock number which took on the heavy beat we've become so accustomed to and he did an excellent job on them.

As a matter of fact, his rendition of Les Bicyclettes de Belsize was super and most of the Canadians gave him a big hand at the end.

The Russians at the hotel were basically young and dressed not too differently from Canadian young people going out to the same type of function.

You could pick up the entire Russian crowd at the Intourist, drop them off at the Old Forge and you probbably couldn't tell the difference.

When the Canadians did get up and joined in at the dance floor, there was no difference in their styles and dress.

So the western influence is creeping and and the young people of the Soviet Union obviously like what they see and hear of our kind of music.

Monday is turning out to be quite a night for first names.

The Gary and Dave Show is on at The McPherson Playhouse starting at 8 p.m. and the talented Canadian singers should put on quite a show.

And the Stardust Cabaret, Allan begins a week-long engagement. Allan is billed as the closest thing to Elvis Presley without the expense of the real thing. According to the Stardust's Pat Laughlin, Allan looks, acts and sings identical to Elvis.

Flawless rendition

ATLANTA (UPI) — In a small dining room beneath the stands at Atlanta's Omni, Louise "Lou" Walker was nervous. She picked at her fried chicken, drummed her fingers on the table, and wondered what she had talked herself into.

Lou, a former church organist in her tiny hometown of Huntsville, Tenn., was about to walk out and play a large organ for some 13,000 hockey fans. She knew that there would be a special interest in her performance because earlier in the month, another organist in the Omni had flubbed the national anthem.

After all, the largest audience she had ever played to was about 75 persons in the Huntsville Presbyterian church, "and that would be at Easter or Christmas."

It was 45 minutes before game time when Lou climbed up to the Omni's huge Lowrey organ. She played a variety of tunes, and then the big test, the Star Spangled Banner.

She performed flawlessly.

Wife loves actor so hopeful quits

LONDON (UPI) — Neil Balfour, whose wife plans to marry actor Richard Burton, has withdrawn as a parliamentary candidate in any future election, a local Conservative party official said. Balfour's wife Princess Elizabeth of Yugoslavia, campaigned for him in his unsuccessful race Oct. 10. A few days later Burton announced that he and Elizabeth were in love and planned to marry.

CLEU report raises eyebrows

What pilferage, pray tell?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Airline and waterfront officials said Saturday they were unaware of massive pilferage indicated in a crime report released here Friday.

The report, by the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit, said: "Wholesale theft, and the subsequent fencing of illegally obtained goods, is a large-scale, almost casual pastime in B.C.'s shipping industry."

The report also said the amount of thefts is so vast they must be organized.

However, National Harbors Board police superintendent Ted Ciunyk said: "There's always some pilfering going on but I'm unaware of any large-scale reported crime."

Ciunyk said he did not want to comment further until he had read the report.

An Air Canada spokesman said: "Pilferage isn't really that much of a problem."

He said there were six instances of pilferage discovered in August, out of 9,003 shipments. In September, there were 10 instances out of 9,669 shipments.

"Even these pilferages don't necessarily occur here," he said. "We traced one back to Orly airport in France."

The spokesman said a close check is kept on shipments by checking waybills.

"We don't really think we're being hit by organized crime," he said.

A CP Air spokesman also said that pilferage loss on his airline was "minimal" although he did not have specific figures.

He said most cargo shipped air freight is containerized and goes to the consignee directly, without being put in warehouses.

A spokesman for the airport manager said the minister of transport was not responsible for goods lost in transit by the airlines.

Saved by dog once, man offers to help save 100

DIDSBURY, Alta. (CP) — A Toronto businessman whose life was saved by a dog when he was a child has offered to pay expenses necessary to help George Woodward whose 100 dogs have been slated for killing by the SPCA.

Doug MacDonald, who says he is part owner of several advertising, public relations and film companies in Toronto and Calgary, said Saturday he is willing to spend several thousand dollars to see that the pensioner and his pets are treated fairly.

"I haven't made any specific offer, I have just asked him what I can do," MacDonald said in a telephone interview.

MacDonald said he called Woodward Friday night after reading about the elderly man's plight in a newspaper. He also telephoned Salvation Army envoy George Maley, who has been acting as a mediator between Woodward and authorities.

"I have always been a dog lover," MacDonald said. "When I was a kid our dog woke the whole family one night when the house was on fire."

Woodward, 64, has been ordered evicted from his rented farm home where he feeds himself and his dogs with farm produce and lives on a veterans pension of $160 a month. Authorities sought permission to kill the dogs because Woodward could take them with him when he moved.

They said the dogs could not readily be adopted by other people since they were wild and high strung.

United Way wants donations by mail

Victorians who were missed by United Way residential canvassers are being urged by appeal chairman Robert Ostler to mail their donations in envelopes left at their homes.

If they have misplaced the envelopes, the address is: United Way of Greater Victoria, 737 Fort Street.

Ostler said he was "encouraged" by results of the campaign so far which — at $210,750 — are about two per cent ahead of collections at the same time last year.

New Presbyterian moderator

New moderator of B.C. conference of Presbyterian Church in Canada is Rev. David Smith, left, of West Point Grey Presbyterian Church, Vancouver. Son of Mrs. David Smith of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Victoria, he was elected at synod in that church last week marking centenary of national church. Also in photo are, right, Rev. Gilbert Smith, immediate past moderator, of Victoria's Trinity Presbyterian Church and, centre, Dr. Bruce Miles of Winnipeg, keynote speaker.

Master contract with province

Pact covers nurses

About 1,500 British Columbia registered nurses and registered psychiatric nurses are now covered by a master contract with the province's Public Service Commission.

The contract was signed Friday by the commission and the B.C. Registered Psychiatric Nurses' Association and the B.C. Registered Nurses' Association, bargaining agents for nurses working for the provincial government.

The new contract details conditions of employment and covers most aspects of the nurses' jobs, except wages, which will be bargained for by the two component groups: hosptial nurses and community-based nurses.

Those negotiations are expected to start soon, public service commissioner R. D. Higgins said in Victoria Saturday.

The associations were certified by the Labor Relations Board last May.

Talks between the commission and two other groups — licenced professionals, such as pharmacists and engineers, and the B.C. Government Employees' Union — continue.

The BCGEU has also signed a master contract with the government and is now in the process of negotiating individual contracts for its 27,000 members, divided into 13 individual bargaining units.

Detox centre okayed

A proposed detoxification centre has found a home after getting the cold shoulder from Rockland residents and city council last month.

Council has approved an application from the human resources department to convert a private rest home at 941 McClure to "a treatment centre for chemically dependent adults."

The application was approved on condition that housing is found for 17 elderly residents of Queens Park Lodge Rest Home.

The city rejected the Rockland location after a flood of complaints from residents.

Dr. Charles Aharan, director of research for the B.C. Alcohol and Drug Commission, operator of the proposed centre, expects the McClure Street location to be in use by the end of the year.

Initially it will provide treatment for 10 to 12 adults.

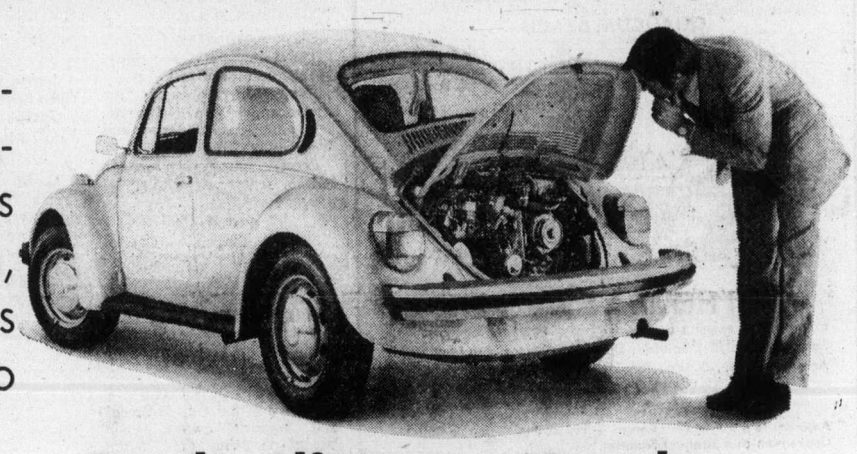
1975. THE YEAR YOU CAN FINALLY AFFORD FUEL INJECTION.

Until now, fuel injection has almost exclusively been a luxury item on luxury cars, costing anywhere up to twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars.

And if you've had the big sums of money it took to buy those kind of cars, then you know what a wonderful thing fuel injection can be.

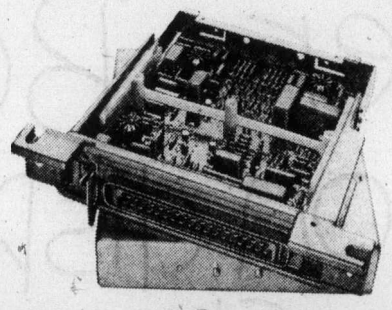
Well, from this day on, all you need is the little sum of money it takes to buy a 1975 VW Beetle, to know what a wonderful thing fuel injection can be.



Porsche, Alfa Romeo, Mercedes and now the Beetle.

What you get for your money is an electronic brain, or control unit, that receives signals from the engine, evaluates them, and in micro-seconds, determines exactly how much fuel should go into each cylinder.

And then, again in micro-seconds, the fuel injectors (where the system gets its name from) actually inject the precise amount of gas for each cylinder. As an added bonus we might add that our system still only requires good old regular gas.



It's run electronically.

Now, if all this sounds rather remarkable, well it is.

Because it means you don't waste a drop of gas.

Your engine runs more smoothly, it runs more efficiently and it runs more trouble-free.

Plus, the whole system is perfectly pre-set. And tamper-proof.

What else you get for your money is the amazing package it all comes in: The Volkswagen Beetle.

A car that's by now legendary for its craftsmanship, quality and dependability. As well as a car that's covered by the VW Owner's Security Blanket, probably the most advanced auto coverage plan in the world.

The 1975 Beetle with electronic fuel injection.

Just possibly, with the way things are shaping up, this might be the year you can't afford not to own one.

The 1975 Beetle.

Pollution 'not high'

Victoria's air 'no problem'

Pollution in Greater Victoria isn't bad enough to justify issuing a daily air quality index, according to the assistant director of the Pollution Control Branch.

"I'm not really sure it would be too much use. Pollution levels just aren't high enough to warrant it," Robert Ferguson said in an interview.

An air quality index would probably be based on the concentration of sulphur compounds in the air, he explained, and those levels in Victoria aren't very high.

The biggest source of air pollution is automobiles, with the B.C. Forest Products plant the next largest polluter, Ferguson said.

Dr. A. S. Arneil, regional health officer, said Victoria is probably one of the least-polluted cities on the continent and, up to now, he hasn't felt its air quality is a problem.

But although there isn't a daily index of pollution, air monitoring machines are keeping a constant watch on local pollution levels.

Sam Mottishaw, Victoria city smoke inspector, said the machines, one placed near the B.C. Forest Products plant and the others installed on the roof of the police station on Fisgard, check sulphur dioxide levels and the number of particles in the air.

He said the sampler collecting sulphur readings is not working, but "particulate matter readings have been rather high lately," as a high pressure weather system on the coast has stopped air flow in the area.

On Oct. 16th, a reading of 2.9 was recorded, compared with a monthly average since January of 0.3, he said.

Readings above two indicate heavy haze, Mottishaw said.

Sadat plans France visit

PARIS (UPI) — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will visit France officially early next year, Paris newspapers reported Saturday. Sadat's trip will be a "working visit" and is set for January or February.

New leader

New president of the Association of Professional Engineers of British Columbia is D. K. Bannerman, director of the engineering division of the B.C. Institute of Technology in Burnaby. He was elected at 55th annual meeting of association at the Empress which ended Saturday. He succeeds Fred Milligan of Vancouver

Couvelier seeks re-election

Saanich Ald. Mel Couvelier announced Saturday he will be seeking re-election to council this fall.

Concern for future development if Saanich has caused him to seek a second term, Couvelier said.

He would like to see the distribution of townhouse developments in Saanich regulated. "We can't fight the fact that townhouses will be the housing of the future, but measures should be taken to insure that their social impact is not excessive," he said.

He pointed to Blanshard Court in Victoria as an example of "what happens when you lump people together like that," and compared that development to a 305-unit one proposed for the Marigold-Interurban area.

"One suggestion is to set a limit of 24 townhouse units to a neighborhood," he said.

Couvelier also wants a change in Saanich sign bylaws. "Shelbourne is becoming another fluorescent nightmare," he said.

Couvelier won his council seat in a byelection last year.

Ocean control fight coming

By DON GAIN
Colonist Reporter

The popular conception of West Coast waters differs from what actually is going on, a Victoria scientist told the annual meeting of the Association of Professional Engineers of British Columbia Saturday.

People who think the Japan current sweeping across the Pacific keeps the climate warm don't give any explanation as to why the water here is so "blessed cold," said Dr. R. W. Stewart, director of marine sciences for Environment Canada.

There is a warm current near Japan, Stewart went on, but by the time the water travels 5,000 miles through the North Pacific — over a period of two years — it has lost its warmth.

Stewart told the meeting that wind is an influence on all oceanographic problems.

It is important for Environment Canada to know what happens when there is an oil spill, he said.

"If it is a massive spill, there is very little anybody can do except protect some small local areas. To deal with lesser spills we have to predict where the water goes."

Speaking on the ocean's petroleum resources, Bruce Cameron of Vancouver, a professional geologist with the Geological Survey of Canada, said interest of oil companies in the West Coast continental margin has been rather limited and sporadic since 1913.

No major reserves have been found, he said, but exploration histories in other areas of Canada indicate "it is far too early to discount the area as a major oil province."

Dr. George Curtis, of the law faculty of the University of British Columbia, told the meeting there were no decisions taken at the recent Caracas Conference on the Law of the Sea even after two months of discussions.

Yet the need for action is very great, he went on. "Mankind needs, in the worst way, the resources in and under the oceans which make up 70 per cent of the earth's surface, to help meet the recurring shortages of materials."

The clearest thing to show up at Caracas, he said, was strong support for a 200-mile-wide economic zone offshore for each coastal state . . . but there was no agreement as to what rights each coastal state should have.

"So the real international tug-of-war over control of ocean resources is to come later."

The newly-elected president of the association — D. K. Bannerman, of the engineering division of the B.C. Institute of Technology in Burnaby — called on his profession to "speak out" on important issues and get involved in politics.

"We have to speak out where we can add expertise, where the public needs guidance and where we can say that a certain piece of legislation is not good."

Not guilty, dentist says

MASSET (CP) — A Queen Charlotte Islands dentist has pleaded not guilty Friday to wilfully damaging property and was remanded to Nov. 7 for trial. Dr. Robert Orr was charged after a man overturned candy shelves and flung jelly beans around a grocery store with shouts of "poison" and "dope."

Weddings

Gale — Sadler

The Metropolitan United Church was the scene of a lovely double-ring ceremony Saturday, August 24, 1974, when Frances Jeannette Sadler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilf Sadler, became the bride of Charles Michael Gale, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Gale. Rev. Laura Butler officiated.

The radiant bride entered the church on the arm of her father to the strains of the Hawaiian Wedding Song, sung by Mr. Alex Stewart. Her gown of white chiffon with flowing train was trimmed with lace and mauve satin ribbon and her fingertip veil also trimmed with lace falling from a Spanish tiara of white lace and mauve flowers. She carried a bouquet of white roses and carnations circled with mauve heather and centred with a mauve orchid; with flowing satin ribbons tied with roses and a silver horseshoe. The gold band wedding ring was her late maternal grandmother's. Her matron of honor was her sister, Mrs. Betty Ann Lumley; maid of honor, Sue White; bridesmaids, Phyllis Budgell and Lori Gale, sisters of the groom; junior bridesmaids, Cardna and Pam Lumley, nieces of the bride, all wearing yellow and green georgette long gowns and matching lace picture hats, respectively, and carrying pomanders. Flower girl, Lori Moodie, cousin of the bride, in multi mauve long georgette dress with roses in her hair carried a mauve ball of flowers.

Best man, Mr. Dave Gale, brother of the groom; ushers were Messrs. Ken McCarthy, Troy Bains, Tom Bricker, John Hermans and Kevin Morgan wearing corresponding frilled yellow and green shirts. Ring bearer, Ken Lumley, nephew of the bride, wearing a frilled mauve shirt. During the signing of the register "I Love You Truly" was sung by Susan, Michelle and Sharon Gale, nieces of the groom.

Following the bridal party pictures in the garden of Government House, 250 guests gathered at the reception in Playland Curling Club, where the bride and groom introduced their attendants from the bridal table. Mr. Keith McKenzie of CKDA was master of ceremonies. Toast to the Bride was given by Mr. Fred Magee, answered by Mr. Dave Gale, who also read telegrams. The beautiful three-tier wedding cake, trimmed with mauve roses and topped with three bells and two white doves holding two wedding rings, was cut with the traditional sword. The bridal waltz of "Please Love Me Forever" was sung by Mr. Alex Stewart to the music of Mr. Dennis Gibbs.

The bride looked lovely in a navy blue dress and short coat suit trimmed in white and white accessories with a deep pink lace picture hat before leaving on their honeymoon to Southern California.

Out-of-town guests included, Mr. and Mrs. Moore and Nick and Doreen, of Yellowknife; Mrs. M. Andrews, of Calgary; Mrs. V. Trapp, of Port Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. Moodie, Mr. and Mrs. Turkington, Mr. Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. Gillisple, all of Vancouver; Mr. and Mrs. Oliver, of Richmond, and Miss M. Blackhall, of Aldergrove.

Warren — Holmes

Dr. Mowat officiated at a double-ring ceremony in St. Andrew's Prebyterian Church on September 28, 1974, at 6:30 p.m. when Dianne Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Holmes, 825 Admirals Rd., Victoria, exchanged wedding vows with Mr. Richard Kenneth Warren, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. Warren, 1376 Monterey Ave., Victoria.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attended by Miss Lynn Woodward, as maid of honor, and Miss Kathy Warren, sister of the groom, as bridesmaid. Mr. Dave Gray attended as groomsman and Mr. Dave Holmes, Jr., as usher.

Following a reception at the Empress Hotel, Mr. and Mrs. Warren left on a wedding trip to Portland, Oregon.

Graham — Butt

Reverend King officiated at a double-ring ceremony in the Metropolitan United Church, Victoria, on Sept. 27, 1974, when Wendy Margaret, daughter of Mrs. Arthur Butt and the late Mr. Butt, exchanged wedding vows with Mr. John Colin Graham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Graham, Regina, Sask.

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, Percy, chose a floor-length white gown trimmed with Chantilly lace and seed pearls and carried a cascade of apricot roses and stephanotis. The bride was attended by her sister Miss Hazel Butt as maid of honour, Mrs. Rhonda Smith as matron of honour, Miss Sharon Dormer as bridesmaid who wore identical apricot chiffon gowns and carried bouquets of white carnations. The little flower girl, Miss Nicole Peacey, wore a white lace apricot-lined dress and her brother Kirk was ring-bearer. Mr. William Peacey, Jr., attended as best man and ushers were Messrs. Barry Darnell and Paul Basi.

Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. R. Graham, Regina, Sask., Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Davis, London, England, Mrs. McKillop, Chilliwack, Mr. Hall, Everett, U.S.A., Mr. Budd, Seattle, and Mr. Darnell, Vernon, B.C.

Rowsell — Olstead

A pretty double-ring ceremony was solemnized on August 17, 1974, at 5:30 p.m. in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, when Dianne Louise, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Olstead, Boyd Street, exchanged marriage vows with Danny Bruce, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Rowsell, Scarborough, Ontario. Reverend Bruce Molloy officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a white floor-length gown of peau de soie featuring long lace sleeves and train. A simple shoulder-length veil was held in place by daisies and she carried a bouquet of red roses. The bride was attended by her sister-in-law, Margeruite Olstead, as maid of honour, Diana Rowsell, the groom's sister as bridesmaid and Laurel Olstead, niece of the bride, as flowergirl. They were attired in empire styled floor-length gowns and carried bouquets of shasta daisies. Mr. Donald Olstead was best man and Douglas Fearon was usher.

The reception took place at the Dominion Hall where there was a buffet and dancing. The toast to the bride was proposed by Mr. Douglas Olstead. Telegrams were read by Mr. Andrew Downey, Brandon, Manitoba.

Out-of-town guests were from Manitoba, Ontario, Washington, Alberta, Prince George, B.C., and the mainland.

Chapman — Coventry

Reverend Bruce Molloy officiated at a beautiful double-ring ceremony in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on September 28th, 1974, at 2:30 p.m., uniting in marriage Angela Barbara, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Coventry to Robert Arthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Chapman.

Given in marriage by her father, Angela chose a gown of white nylon and lace, a pearl headdress and a short veil. She carried a bouquet of yellow roses. Her only jewelery was an heirloom choker of French paste which belonged to the bride's great-grandmother, the Countess of Coventry. Matron of honor, Mrs. Jane Muir, and bridesmaid Miss Joan Crawford, wore yellow gowns and carried bronze mums. Mr. Roger Muir was best man.

A reception followed at the Red Lion. The lovely wedding cake was made and decorated by the bride's mother, three dolls dressed in "icing" to match the wedding party highlighted the bride's table. Ted Fairhurst proposed the toast to the bride.

The happy couple left on a honeymoon in the east. They will make their home in Coquitlam.

Tonge — Stanyer

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stanyer are pleased to announce the marriage of their youngest daughter, Mary-Ellen to Gregory Owen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Tonge, Sidney, B.C. Father John Lancaster officiated at Christ Church Cathedral on September 7, 1974.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was attended by her sister, Lynda Catherine, as maid of honour; Miss Sandra Ralph acted as bridesmaid. Best man was Mr. John Milnes, usher was Mr. J. Martin Band, cousin of the bride.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents.

Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ralph, Sandra and Brenda Ralph of Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. K. Galaugher of Vancouver, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Band, Mrs. Sharon Dunmall and Martin Band of Winnipeg, Man.

Horning — Bell

Mrs. Dorothy Bell is pleased to announce the marriage of her youngest daughter, Marilyn Ann, to Stephen Clarke, son of Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Horning, all of Victoria.

The double ring ceremony took place at St. Stephen's Anglican Church, on October 12, 1974, with Reverend Ivan Futter officiating.

A reception followed at the Oak Bay Beach Hotel.

The couple returned to Victoria where both are continuing studies at the University of Victoria.

Stephen and Marilyn welcome any friends who wish to come and visit.

Weber — Olynick

A pretty double-ring ceremony was solemnized on Oct. 12, 1974, in St. Paul's Anglican Church when Cheryl Olynick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nick Olynick became the bride of Mike Weber, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Weber, all of Victoria. Rev. Greenhalgh officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents, was attended by Linda Simons, matron of honour, and bridesmaids Tas Duncan, Sue Weber and Barb Davison. Bob Crawford was the groom's best man and ushers were Jim Allen, Bill Phillips and Wayne Weber.

A reception followed in the Legion Hall, Esquimalt, where Gerry Gerrard was master of ceremonies. The toast to the bride was made by her cousin, Jim Walton, and Vance Anderson supplied the music for the entertainment.

After a short honeymoon in Reno, Nevada, the young couple will make their home in Esquimalt.

DeLaurier — Hawthorne

A pretty double-ring ceremony was solemnized by Reverend William Z. Van Druten on Friday, August 9, 1974, in Oak Bay United Church, when Janice Lee, only daughter of Mrs. Joan M. White, Victoria, B.C., and Mr. G. David Hawthorne, Atlanta, Georgia, became the bride of Arthur Henry DeLaurier, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank DeLaurier, Chatham, Ontario.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor-length gown of nylon chiffon with lace bodice accentuated by pale lilac ribbon encircling the waist. The bride's face was framed by a lace Juliet-style cap with seed pearls and lilac rosebuds, and a four-tiered illusion veil. Her bouquet consisted of white baby's breath, yellow rosebuds and white carnations. The groom was attired in his military service uniform and wore a plain white carnation on his jacket lapel. Maid of honour, Miss Susan Blake, wore a full-length gown of white Swiss-dotted nylon over lilac taffeta and a lilac wide-brimmed hat. Mr. Robert Marseille was best man; Norman Hawthorne and Barry White, brothers of the bride, ushered the guests to their seats.

A cocktail reception followed in the Gold Room at the University of Victoria. The bride's father acted as master of ceremonies and her uncle, Mr. Harry Arkinstall, proposed the toast to the bride.

Following a honeymoon in the Okanagan the couple now reside in Victoria where the bride is in Registered Nurse's training at Victoria General Hospital, and the groom is stationed at CFB Esquimalt.

Walton — Greenwood

Mr. and Mrs. James Duprau, 285 Helmcken Rd., announce the marriage of the latters daughter, Sandra Lee Greenwood, to Peter George Walton, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Walton of Surrey, B.C. The wedding took place on Oct. 19, at St. James Anglican Church, Vancouver at 4 p.m. The ceremony was performed by Father Wright. Mr. and Mrs. Walton will reside in Vancouver.

Peckham — Cleghorn

A double ring ceremony was solemnized on Octbber 5, 1974 at 8 p.m. in Wilkinson Road United Church, when Nancy Rose-Mary, daughter of Mrs. Kay Cleghorn and the late Mr. Ken Cleghorn, exchanged marriage vows with Austin Maurice, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. Peckham. Rev. G. G. Smith officiated and Mrs. Betty Winter was the soloist.

Given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Rick Cleghorn. The bride chose a floor-length gown of white organza over white satin, with embroidered bodice and tapered sleeves. Her four-tiered chapel length veil was caught into an arrangement of organized petals and she carried a bouquet of cascading white feathered mums, white stephanotis and ivy.

The bride was attended by her sister Mrs. Janet Howard as matron of honour. The groom's sister, Miss Audrey Peckham, and Miss Sharon Knapp were bridesmaids. The three wore long dresses of flowered beige, trimmed with gold and orange velvet ribbons, with high necklines and gathered sleeves, made by the bride. They carried colonial bouquets of gold and orange mums.

The groom chose Mr. Doug Smith as his best man and Mr. Keith Bendall and Mr. Brian Jenkins ushered the guests to their seats.

Following the ceremony friends and relatives gathered at the Dominion Hall where a four-tiered wedding cake made by the bride's mother and beautifully decorated by Mrs. John Oliver was centred on the bride's table. The toast to the bride was given by Mr. Bill Jones, a long-time friend of the family. Dancing was enjoyed later on in the evening.

Out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Newton and Miss Louise McGechie from Vancouver, B.C., Mr. and Mrs. T. West, from Abbotsford, B.C. and Mr. and Mrs. H. O'Keefe from Duncan, B.C.

The happy couple will be making their home in Prince Rupert, B.C.

Oulton — Campbell

A double ring ceremony was solemnized on August 17, 1974 at 7 p.m. in the Smithers United Church when Lucille Gaye, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George G. Campbell, Victoria, B.C., exchanged marriage vows with Donald Leslie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Oulton, Burnaby, B.C. Reverend Gordon Jackson officiated.

Given in marriage jointly by her father and mother, the bride was radiant in a floor length princess style gown designed and made by her mother. Lace and seed pearls trimmed the elbow length sleeves, Victorian neckline and dress. The flowing train was enhanced by a soft ruffle of organza. Her scalloped shoulder length silk illusion veil was caught into a headpiece of lace daisies and seed pearls and she carried a bouquet of baby pink and white roses and baby's breath.

The bride was attended by her sister Maureen Campbell as maid of Honour and bridesmaids Miss Linda Thomas, niece of the groom, Mrs. Lois Campbell, sister in-law of the bride, and Miss Linda Schaefer. They were attired in floor length mauve gowns complemented with matching hats and carried bouquets of pink and white daisies. The mother of the bride wore a pale blue floor length gown accented with a long pearl strand and a white orchid corsage. The mother of the groom chose a floor length pink floral gown and white orchid corsage. Mr. Tim Watson attended as best man and the ushers were Messrs. Russell Berg, Ken Warner and Tom Leach. The three tiered cake was made by the bride's father and beautifully decorated by a friend of the family Mrs. Margery Maxwell of Victoria.

They will reside in Smithers.

Elsom — Thompsop

Marilyn Carol, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Thompson was married on October 12, 1974 to Russell Elsom of Enderby, B.C.

The double ceremony was performed by Rev. David Hoops in St. Andrews United Church, Enderby.

Attendants to the young couple were the bride's sister, Mrs. Lorna Jaschke of Salmon Arm, Miss Sandra Cook, Victoria; Mr. Brian Mikalishen and Mr. Lyle Lutz of Enderby. Flower girl and ring bearer were the bride's niece and nephew Della and Andrew Faulkner.

Following a dinner and dance in the Enderby Drill Hall, Mr. and Mrs. R. Elsom left for a honeymoon at Banff Hotsprings. They will make their home in Revelstoke, B.C.

9 IN MEMORIAM

ISACSON—In loving memory of Wayne, who died due to an accident, October 27, 1968.
What would I give to clasp his hand,
His happy face to see,
To hear his voice and see his smile,
That meant so much to me.
—Remembered always and never forgotten by Mom, Dad, sisters Sandra-Lynn and Sheryl-Ann.

ROBERTS—In memory of a loving husband and dad, John E. (Ed), who passed away October 28, 1973.
Remembrance is a golden chain,
Death tries to break but all in vain,
To have, to love, and then to part
Is the greatest sorrow of one's heart.
The years may wipe out many things,
But this may wipe out never—
The memory of those happy days
When we where all together.
—Always remembered by his loving wife Eleanor and daughter Joyce.

ROBERTS—In memory of a loving dad and grandpa, John E. (Ed), who passed away October 28, 1973.
Nothing can ever take away,
The love a heart holds dear,
Fond memories linger every day,
Remembrance keeps him near.
—Always remembered — Sheila and Don Vail (daughter and son-in-law) and grandson Gerald.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
—WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS.

2:00—No title available. It's not the Poseidon Adventure—12.

2:30—Strange Homecoming (new family suspense), Robert Culp, Glen Campbell, Barbara Anderson. Might be all right—6.

2:30—Village of the Giants (1965 mishmash, also for kids), Ron Howard, Tommy Kirk—11.

2:30—An Inspector Calls (good 1954 Alastair Sim)—12.

4:00—Battle Cry (long, only fair 1955 war epic), Van Heflin, trillions more. The first Leon Uris success—7.

4:00—Fighting Kentuckian (1949 John Wayne)—11.

4:00—The Moon Is Down (1943), Lee Cobb, Cedric Hardwicke. War propaganda but by Steinbeck and well acted—13.

6:00—Knives of the Avenger (1967 Cameron Mitchellemon). It's suppertime, Poseidon is near and I wonder how many will watch this?—13.

● 9:00—The Poseidon Adventure (excellent 1972 liner drama), Gene Hackman, Ernest Borgnine, Shelley Winters, many more. One of those rare films that is praised by both public and critics—4.

● 9:00—Anatomy of a Murder (equally good 1959 rape-killing trial), James Stewart, Lee Remick, Ben Gazzara, Joseph Welch—12.

11:30—Chuka (pretty bad 1969 western violence), Rod Taylor, Ernest Borgnine. I think somebody lives—12.

11:45—If I Were King (1938 Francois Villon amusement), Ronald Colman. A must for nostalgians—2.

11:50—Suppirt Your Local Gunfighter (1971 James Garner). The late movies are all sort of average—6.

12:00—Toys in the Attic (strained 1963 triangle drama), Dean Martin, Geraldine Page, Wendy Hiller. Too uneven for me—4.

12:00—Duel at Diablo (1966 James Garner). This time Sidney Poitier co-stars so the funny stuff is out—7.

12:00—Captain from Castile (long, loud but fairly good 1947 Cortez epic), Tyrone Power and 10 times the original cast—8.

1:50 a.m.—Edge of the City (1957 Sidney Poitier). This time John Cassavetes co-stars so there's both Method and madness—6.

Monday Movies

NOTE: Several goodies this week and after tonight the one to note is The Graduate, 9 p.m. Friday, Channel 11.

12:00 noon—Roadhouse (flat 1948 nasty-folk), Richard Widmark giggles while everyone else flounders around—13.

12:45—You'll Like My Mother (nasty 1972 chiller), Richard Thomas, Patty Duke. Not for small children—8.

1:00 p.m.—The Redhead and the Cowboy (1943 Rhonda Fleming breather). Glenn Ford or somebody else is in it; I've never noticed—11.

3:30—Anastasia (1956 oddity). Helen Hayes is marvellous, Ingrid Bergman is good, Yul Brynner is present—5.

8:00—Romeo and Juliet(du ll 1967 dubber), Geronimo Meynier, Rosemarie Dexter. Don't join the bored of Avon—13.

9:00—Shamus (pointless 1973 Burt Reynolds violence)—5.

9:00—Two for the Seesaw (poorly cast 1962 romance), Shirley MacLaine, Robert Mitchum. Save your eyes for the next one—11.

● 11:00—Citizen Kane (1941 Orson Welles). Considered by many the best movie ever made and they get no argument from me—4.

● 11:30—Saturday Night and Sunday Morning (first-rate 1961 individualist drama), Albert Finney. Only if you haven't seen Kane—12.

11:45—Valley of the Dolls (1967 modern soaper, popular but phoney), Barbara Parkins, Patty Duke, Susan Hayward. Back to Kane—7.

12:00—Blood of the Vampire (1966 Donald Wolfitfit)—

12:00—A Kiss Before Dying (silly 1956 Robert Wagner gets his). Interesting only until Joanne Woodward gets hers—6.

12:00—Calling Northside 777 (above-par 1948 reporter drama), James Stewart and the "invention" of Photofax—8.

2:00 a.m.—The Fugitive Kind (1960 Tennessee Williams flop), Brando, Anna Magnani, Joanne Woodward. If you must watch a late flick, try the next—6.

2:20—Topaz (1969 Hitchcock on Cuba), Frederick Stafford, John Forsythe, John Vernon. Like so many Hitchcock movies, it improves with age—8.

Grievance results in return of fine

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh Pirates have reimbursed pitcher Jerry Reuss with the $500 they fined him for taking his wife on road trips in violation of a club rule.

An official of the Major League Players' Association said the National League baseball team gave Reuss his money back and a grievance over the fine will be dropped.

Reuss was apparently fined three times, once for $100 and twice for $200, but neither he nor the Pirates have had much to say about it.

Asked if the refund meant the rule barring wives from road trips would be dropped, general manager Joe L. Brown said: "It just means that Jerry Reuss has been refunded his money — nothing else."

Fittipaldi outraces match-race field

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — World driving-champion Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil won the wreck-marred second heat in the $200,000 International Race of Champions series Saturday.

Stock car ace Bobby Allison was treated and released from hospital — the only casualty of a pileup of cars seconds after the race started. Allison's car was demolished, as was the one driven by 1974 national driving champion Bobby Unser. Unser escaped injury and drove a backup car in the race, though he finished badly.

Second place went to George Follmer of the United States, a road-racing expert, and third to five-time national champion A. J. Foyt.

The series matches 12 world-class drivers in identically-prepared Chevrolet Camaro coupes. Unser won the first outing, on a two-mile oval in Michigan last month.

The third race in the four-event series will be run at Riverside today, with the fourth and payoff heat scheduled for Daytona Beach, Fla. in February.

Finishing behind Fittipaldi, Follmer and Foyt, in order were David Pearson, Richard Petty, Jody Scheckter, Ronnie Peterson of Sweden, Cale Yarborough, Johnny Rutherford, Graham Hill of England, and Unser. Allison did not make the restart after the wreck.

McAneeley faces charge

DENVER (AP) — Denver district attorney Dale Tooley has filed a third-degree assault charge against Salt Lake City hockey player Bob McAneeley for "recklessly causing bodily injury" to two children at a Central Hockey League game this week between the Spurs and Salt Lake City Eagles.

According to the charge, McAneeley, banished to the penalty box for 25 minutes at the Denver Coliseum Thursday night, protested the penalty by throwing his hockey stick into the crowd.

The stick allegedly hit and injured Mark Engel, 11, and his brother Paul, eight, while they were watching the game. The injuries were minor.

Canadiens farm top draft pick

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League announced Saturday that they have sent centreman Doug Riseborough to their Nova Scotia Voyageurs American Hockey League farm club.

Riseborough, 20, the team's first-round draft choice this year, will report to the Voyageurs immediately.

School board eyes addition of trustee

QUALICUM BEACH—The Qualicum Beach district school board may increase the number of its trustees from five to six. The new trustee would represent the French Creek area.

New portable classrooms, slated for several district schools, should be ready for use next month.

Among the schools which will get the classrooms are the Parksville junior high and the elementary schools at Nanoose and Qualicum Beach.

This week 21 Qualicum Beach Grade 12 students will attend a three-day camp at Northwest Bay, where they will learn camping skills and wilderness survival techniques.

A community plan for the area covered by the Qualicum Beach school district has been drawn up by the Nanaimo Regional District.

St. Michael's sides bow

VANCOUVER — St. George's of Vancouver won six of seven independent schools rugby matches Saturday against St. Michael's University School of Victoria.

St. George's took the first-team match, 31-13; the second-team match, 10-3; the third-team match, 25-10; the fourth-team match, 24-4; the junior-colt match, 12-6; and the junior-junior match, 11-0.

St. Michael's only victory came in the senior-colt match, an 18-3 decision.

Arson brings jail, fine

COURTENAY — Daniel Parker, 39, of Courtenay, was jailed for one day, fined $1,000 and placed on probation for two years by Judge Anthony Sarich for wilfully setting fire to a home in Fourth Street in Courtenay.

Parker was also ordered to make restitution to the home owner and abstain from alcohol during the term of his probation.

The fine and the restitution are to be paid in two years. The fire caused several thousand dollars damage.

Harbors projects

COURTENAY—A total of 27 projects are being funded in the Comox-Alberni riding under Environment Canada's Small Crafts Harbors projects for 1974-75.

The allotment to Comox-Alberni this year is $1,056,000 out of a total budget for the province of $6,000,000.

The Port Alberni, Tofino, Bamfield and Ucluelet areas will receive a major portion of the money, with the remainder going to Campbell River and other North Island areas.

WINTERING HYDRANGEA (K.McD., Victoria)

Do NOT cut down your hydrangea for the winter. The buds for next year's flowers are already formed, and any pruning now would be cutting away next year's display.

The proper time to prune a hydrangea, if it requires reshaping, is immediately after the flowers fade, so the shrub has a whole year in which to prepare for blooming again next year.

In districts subject to severe frosts, these buds are often killed during the winter, resulting in a flowerless shrub the following year.

As your location is rather low-lying and subject to late spring frosts, I think it would probably pay you to give your hydrangea some kind of protection after the leaves have fallen.

Straw piled around and over the bush would probably see it through the winter safely, or spray the buds and stems with Wilt-Pruf liquid plastic.

MOONFLOWER VINE (H.C., Brentwood Bay)

Calonyction aculeatum, the Moonflower, is a twining climber closely related to the Morning Glory, bearing fragrant white trumpet flowers up to six inches a across that close during the day and open at night — the reverse of its cousin, the Morning Glory. Its pollinator is a night-flying moth.

Although technically a tropical perennial, the Moonflower is usually grown as an annual, sowing the seeds in heat in early spring and growing the plants in pots until it is safe to plant them out; they will not stand any fost, and are unhappy in temperatures much under 55 degrees.

Seeds should be soaked for seven hours in lukewarm water, then germinated at 80 to 85 degrees. I have had many failures with the Moonflower, but almost none with the better-known Heavenly Blue Morning Glory.

ROCK PHLOX (M.L., Colwood)

Rock phlox may be treated in any one of three different ways. The plants may be left to go their own way through the winter, or they may be trimmed back lightly after flowering, or they may be cut almost to ground level after flowering.

I would say the second option — trim back lightly — is probably the best method.

It is also possible to mound up around the bare, woody stems with gritty soil or a mixture of sand and dampened peat moss if the plants are in a suitable position for this to be done.

They soon push out new roots into the mounding material and make good large clumps, some pieces of which may be broken off and replanted elsewhere.

SHRUBS UNDER TREES (S.O'C., Ganges)

When attempting to grow plants under trees, particularly under conifers, it is most important to remember that as well as shade, there is the problem of very dry soil, from which the tree roots are continually drawing plant foods and moisture.

Therefore, plenty of water during the growing season and regular replenishment of plant food in the form of manure or fertilizers is most essential.

Before planting, dig in generous quantities of old manure or ripe compost, and fork into the surface a dressing of 6-8-6 fertilizer.

Under coniferous trees the soil is almost sure to be overly acid, and this should be corrected by sprinkling the surface with garden lime, about ¾ cupfuls per square yard, and raking it in shallowly.

Some suitable small shrubs are Berberis darwinii, Berberis stenophylla, Mahonia, Cotoneaster franchetii, Hydrangeas, Kerria Japonica, Choisya ternata and Acuba japonica.

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON—As everyone knows, I have always been in the forefront of the fight for women's liberation. My body is scarred from battling on the picket lines at the Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City and the Miss Universe Contest in Miami. As we say in the lib movement, "I've paid my dues."

Therefore, I believe I can deal with the following subject with complete objectivity. What on God's green Astroturf is a woman doing acting as a sports commentator during a professional football game?

Last week I turned on the Redskin-Giant game, leaned back in my chair with a beer in my hand and a bowl of potato chips at my feet. Suddenly I heard this strange voice on the air. It sounded exactly like a woman's. My first thought was that CBS' Pat Summerall had had a serious operation.

Then I decided that the sound on my set had gone away. But a few seconds later a very pretty brunette came on the screen who was introduced as Jane Chastain, and Summerall said she was going to do the color for the game.

I sat straight up in my seat. A woman doing color on TV? Didn't CBS have any shame at all?

How could a multibillion-dollar network invade the homes of 30 million beer-drinking, potato chip-eating, red-blooded football fans with the voice of a girl?

Let us make no mistake about this. Football watching is the last refuge of the male chauvinist pig. We invented the game: we play it every Sunday — and Monday and Wednesday and Thursday and Friday and Saturday (see your local paper for TV listings). It is our thing.

As nice as Ms. Chastain looks and as knowledgeable as she tried to be, she has no more business on a TV football game than Howard Cosell has on The Waltons.

If I were to conjecture why CBS made this decision, I would have to guess that by assigning a woman announcer to a TV football game they were trying to attract a larger female audience. They were hoping to win over the wives or, as they are called, "widows" of the men who spend their weekends staring dumbly at their tubes.

This thinking is not the way we do things in North America. The role of the wife on Sunday afternoons is to make the beds, prepare the meals, drive the children somewhere or take care of any relatives who might drop in unexpectedly.

Even if they wanted to, they don't have time to watch football. It is a cruel hoax on the part of the network to try to attract them to the TV screen when it knows women have so many more important things to do.

To show you the groveling they did last Sunday, CBS had Ms. Chastain interview Billie Jean King at half time. The last thing men want to see during a football half time is an interview with Billie Jean King.

Let me make myself perfectly clear. I have no objection to women being airline pilots, truck drivers, senators and even president. They're entitled.

They can be doctors, lawyers, automobile mechanics, policemen, firemen and Indian chiefs. They can own banks, be in the numbers rackets and play little league baseball if they want to.

The only place they don't belong is on a TV sportscast telling us male spectators things that they think we didn't know about football.

P.S. No abusive mail concerning this column will be answered.

Sydney Harris

THOUGHTS AT LARGE:

It is not so much the drive for power itself as the desire to be attached to power that makes most men sacrifice morality for expediency.

We are rapidly reaching that fulcrum point in civilization where the production of garbage is beginning to outstrip the production of commodities.

A character is made both by what supports it and by what resists it; and the finest characters are those which have been tempered in this way, neither made flaccid by exessive support nor made brittle by excessive hardship.

Hatred is such a distorting emotion that even to hate hatred represents a kind of victory for the object.

"Scenario" is the modern word that, in practical politics, replaces "truth."

Philanthropy thrives on the acknowledgment that, while you can't buy your way into heaven, you may be able to donate your way in. (The fallacy here being that the more you have, the less meaning your gift has.)

The ultimate revolution will smash the pedestals along with the statues.

The source of man's tragedy is that he cannot live without general and abstract ideas — and yet such ideas inevitably lead him into fatally preposterous extremes, defending one aspect of reality against its contrary.

To refer to the "honor" of one's country marks one as a fool or a demagogue; honor is a personal attribute, and can no more be possessed by a country than can virginity, humor, tastebuds, or corpulence.

Judging a man like Nixon means rising above partisan and political levels and applying the question asked by Wilhelm von Humboldt nearly two centuries ago: "What concept would we have of humanity if he were its only representative?"

My recent piece on highway slaughter and the ineptitude of drivers was ironically confirmed recently by U.S. coast guard figures showing that the most dangerous element in a guardsman's life is not the sea but the road: last year the coast guard lost 32 men — 23 by auto accident.

The same man who publicly praises "free enterprise" privately deplores "cut-throat competition."

What we have decided to call "normality" is simply the common denominator of our collective madness.

James Bacon's Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD—For the first time since the Sands Hotel opened in Las Vegas on Dec. 15, 1952, Danny Thomas won't be doing the anniversary show.

In fact, he will be booked across the Strip at the Dunes hotel — first time he has ever worked for anybody other than the Sands organization which presently is the Howard Hughes organization.

Reached in Boston where he was doing a benefit for his St. Jude's hospital in Memphis, Danny said of the switch:

"The Sands people and I are still friends but they have Wayne Newton booked for the anniversary week. I'll come over and cut the anniversary cake just like I've done for 21 years.

"Major Riddle and Sid Wyman of the Dunes are old friends of mine so they said as long as I'm not working for the Sands, how about coming over and working for us while we're getting the next Casino de Paris show ready.

"It was okay with the Sands management so I'm playing the Dunes." Danny makes it all sound so friendly but there's undoubtedly more there than meets the high rollers.

It's no secret that Danny has been offered much bigger money by other hotels on the Strip. Like Sinatra and Dean Martin, Danny is a high roller lure.

Danny has stayed at the Sands because, as he once told me:

"Friendship is more important than money."

Danny told of an incident the other night in Boston. He's staying at the Sheraton there and the place was surrounded by anti-busing pickets waiting for Sen. Ted Kennedy to emerge.

The crowd was in an ugly mood and booing. Who would ever thought a Kennedy would be booed in Boston?

Danny came out of the hotel in the midst of the booing and the boos turned to cheers.

You people who watch TV only in prime time probably never heard of Susan Seaforth and Bill Hayes but there are millions of people who have.

Well, the two stars of the daytime soap opera Days of Our Lives on NBC-TV just got married quietly.

Protest filed over ICBC ad

The provincial government is violating its own Trade Practices Act with its car insurance advertising campaign, the Victoria Chamber of Commerce believes.

Chamber manager Brian Small said Saturday a protest has been registered with consumer services director Michael Hanson. It charges that the Insurance Corporation of B.C. is misleading the public with its statement that Victoria drivers will pay no more for insurance next year.

The advertisements carried in newspapers and aired over radio stations this week made no mention of the new gasoline tax allocation that will subsidize Autoplan, the chamber pointed out.

The advertisements stated, in part: "Victoria car insurance rates stay the lowest in B.C. . . . Anything that costs the same as last year is a real bargain, and that is certainly true of Victoria Autoplan rates."

Small said advertisers are "obliged under the Trade Practices Act to provide the customer with the total cost of a contract of any kind."

But the ICBC ads do not mention that next year 10 cents for every gallon of gas purchased will go to Autoplan from provincial fuel tax.

In effect, Small said, this scheme means the average driver may wind up paying double for insurance.

The motorist who paid $100 for car insurance this year, driving an average 10,000 miles at 10 miles to the gallon in 1975, will have to pay another $100 in taxes which go to ICBC.

Composers offered challenge

TORONTO (CP) — Toronto Symphony announced Saturday a Canada-wide contest for student composers aged 18 to 25.

Daily Colonist Magazine

VICTORIA, B.C., SUNDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1974

Socialism was painted as the enemy of British Columbia.
It was said that British Columbians were drinking too much.
It was also said those dreadful Americans had better stop making goo-goo eyes at Canada.

In 1899 the Colonist said . . .

Socialism Would Mean Disaster to Thousands

No, not today, in Victoria, but 75 years ago, in 1899.

The first two socialists had been elected to the British Columbia Legislature.

By JAMES K. NESBITT

The Colonist viewed this turn of policitcal events with considerable alarm:

"We do not want to see this beautiful, free province of British Columbia converted into a Canadian Kansas.

"Socialism got the upper hand in Kansas a few years ago, and the immediate result was the prompt withdrawal of capital.

"It was not simply that men controlling money refused to invest in that state.

"But investments were withdrawn as rapidly as they could be realized upon.

"The first people to feel the pressure were the small property holders, whose houses were mortgaged. The effect upon them was disastrous.

"They were compelled to take up their overdue mortgages, and when they were unable to do so, legal proceedings were commenced in order to prevent the security from being tampered with by socialist legislation.

"Millions upon millions were taken out of the state.

"What caused capital to take alarm was not the legislation actually enacted, but the fear that mischievous legislation would be placed on the statute books.

"Once let it be known abroad that this fair province of British Columbia — Canada's jewel on the Pacific — is in the hands of men whose ideas are socialistic, all will be lost.

"If this becomes so, a veritable panic will be caused which will mean disaster to thousands here and set British Columbia far back on the road of progress.

"It is the first duty of every patriotic British Columbia voter to rescue their beloved province from the hands of such socialist wreckers.

"British Columbia has no need for the experiments of socialist agitators, and there is great wickedness in seeking to stir up class against class."

There was a saloon on just about every corner in downtown Victoria in 1899.

The Yukon gold rush was in full bloom, and this place was filled with folk who had hit the jackpot in the Klondike.

The Colonist expressed its worry:

"Rudyard Kipling has become a prohibitionist, although one would never think so from his writings.

"He states his position in his own peculiar way.

"He says he likes a drink occasionally, and regards it as a very good thing, but he says so much harm comes from the public exposure of intoxicants for sale that he is willing to be put to a great deal of inconvenience in getting his own liquor in order that the young generation of boys and girls may be kept from acquiring drinking habits.

"Kipling has a remarkable facility for getting to the bottom of things in thus drawing attention to the evil from the acquiring of drinking habits by young people of both sexes he sounds the keynote of what ought to be a new reform.

"The young lives that are being ruined by the drink habit are innumerable.

"The sons, and too often, in these days, the daughters of prosperous citizens fall a prey to intemperance, and the places which they ought to have filled, in business, politics, and society are occupied by others.

"In this new and wonderful province of British Columbia, where new communities are being built up, every effort ought to be put forward to stop the drinking habit from working the same harm here as it had done in the east.

"We must ever be on our guard against this most wicked of evils."

Point Roberts was in the news in 1899, just as it is today.

Canadians living at Point Roberts in 1899 wanted that place to be put into Canada, but the Americans there didn't want to become Canadians.

In this, there is yet no settlement. The debate goes on.

The Colonist, 75 years ago, said:

"If, as appears likely, the Canada-Alaska boundary is to be settled by compromise, it would be well for the Canadian commissioners to ask for a surrender by the United States of Point Roberts to Canada.

"This little piece of territory is of no possible value to that country and is really not much use to Canada, but as there is no means by which it can be carried away and attached to some other part of the United States, it ought to be given to Canada."

"There is no other sensible way of looking at it.

"The United States seems extraordinarily possessive of its territory."

I agree with an 1899 Colonist article about the need for Canadians knowing more about their own history. It was pointed out Canadians knew more about the United States than about their own country.

This fact is still true today.

There was this Colonist editorial 75 years ago:

"Sir John Bourninot has directed attention to the fact that there is no monument in Canada to Joseph Howe.

"This great son of Nova Scotia deserves such recognition as a statue can give.

"More ought to be done than has been done to familiarize the people of Canada with the character and achievements of her illustrious sons.

(There were no women's libbers in those days, so there was no anguished cry of "What about daughters—male chauvinist pigs?")

"Though small in population, and with not a very long history, the British North American provinces have produced many men conspicuous for their ability, and for their devotion to the cause of the people of Canada.

"There is a danger that the youth of Canada may grow up ignorant of the splendid examples set by these men, knowing, instead, much more about the great figures of American history.

"Whatever can reasonably be done to render the footprints which great Canadians leave upon our history, ought to be done."

(I am all for this. I think the long-empty niches in the main rotunda of the legislative buildings should be given over to Sir Joseph Trutch, our first lieutenant-governor; John Foster McCreight, our first premier; Richard Blanshard, first British Royal Governor in these parts, and Sir John A. Macdonald, who, when prime minister of Canada, was, from 1878 to 1882, Victoria's representative in the House of Commons.

(While they're doing this, the powers-that-be in the legislative buildings should do something to protect the fine round mosaic centrepiece in the main lobby.

(They way it is now, it is being trampled to pieces; one of these days it will fall into pieces, be torn away, and likely replaced with some hideous plastic monstrosity.)

The Colonist, in 1899, opined as how Victorians were far too complacent for their own good:

"Anyone who is at all conversant with the history of this city will agree with the statement that Victoria needs more self-reliance and co-operation among its citizens.

"This is not a poor city by any means, for there is a very great deal of wealth here.

"It is as intelligent a community as can be found anywhere.

"It has a fine situation from a commercial point of view.

"It is the headquarters of large business.

"Why does it not advance more rapidly?

"It is making progress, but it might be better.

"If the people of this city, instead of looking for some good fairy, in the guise of a railway president coming across the mountains from the east and showering prosperity upon them, would get together and see what they can do themselves to help themselves, they would be surprised to find they might accomplish a very great deal."

(This, I think, is a peculiarity of many Victorians. They are always looking for good fairies, instead of going to work themselves. Victorians are great people for lots of big talk and not much action.

(There are whole groups of Victorians who sit around for hours trying to figure out ways and means of milking the public, gouging the taxpayers — in othe words, going after government grants, for what's called culture, whatever, exactly, culture means.

(If these people rolled up their sleeves and went to work they might accomplish something.

(But, no — just lots of talking and begging!)

As always, in 1899, there was much talk of Canada joining the United States; sometimes there was this talk, even in Canada.

Any Canadian who came out for annexation to the United States was called a traitor, a disloyal subject of the Queen, God bless Her Majesty, one who would stab Her majesty in the back.

When anyone in the United States said Canada would be better off under the Stars and Stripes the balloon really went sky high.

Here, telling the tale, is a Colonist editorial of 1899:

"Senator Carter of Montana has been talking about the annexation of Canada to the United States, and he speaks about Great Britain's interest in our Dominion as being merely a military one.

"This, he thinks, could be arranged by a treaty between the

HAIG CRUISE

Panama to Hawaii

By VAL HAIGH

Thirty-eight days of frustrations and fishing fun on our longest passage

The first week out from Panama was hot, frustrating and exteremely interesting.

The hottest day was the fourth when the temperature in the shade was 97°F. It was so hot that we handed the mizzen sail and stretched the awning across the boom to give the helmsman shade. We had to steer constantly since it was so windless that the self-steering vanes could not cope.

Below it was cooler than on deck, but doing any small task caused us to stream with perspiration. We tried to cool off by pouring buckets of seawater over us but since the temperature of the water was 86 degrees this had little effect. Ernest cooled off by dragging behind the boat, holding on to the swimguard, but the rest of us were too scared of sharks to do that.

We had to steer for seven days. Ernest became very frustrated at our slow progress but for the rest of us the sea was so intensely full of animal life that we were too interested to be frustrated.

Giant sailfish leapt beside the boat, glorious creatures with royal blue dorsal fins and striped bluish-green bodies.

Turtles and rays were everywhere. Once we passed a turtle swimming along with a little grey bird riding on his back. On several occasions a turtle bumped along beside one of the floats. Ernest was tempted to spear one for fresh meat but we had never butchered a turtle and had heard that it was a messy business. The thought of all that blood over the decks was a sufficient deterrent.

One day when we were becalmed Susan was sitting on the foredeck trying to cool off inside a large plastic garbage bag which Nicola kept filling with buckets of water.

Nicola suddenly saw a pair of dorado swimming close to the boat. We all three watched them for a while before they swam down out of sight. Ernest had been asleep but was awake later when they came along again close to the stern. Excitedly he pulled his speargun out of the locker and started loading it.

"Don't hurry," I said irritatingly. "They're living with us." But by the time he had his spear gun loaded they had swum down out of sight again.

"Living with us!" Ernest snorted.

Next day there was, as Nicola said, "real live wind." It was enough for Tryste to steer herself, which made it cooler below — cool enough to have tea and Scrabble on the saloon table.

We had the rod out with a white plug-like lure on it which we had used in New Zealand to troll for kowhai. I had stood jerking it for a while with some vague idea of summoning fish up from the depths, and then gone below to take my turn at scrabble, when the reel went "zinggggg!"

Ernest wound it in and tried to pass the rod to me so that he could move aft and swing the fish inboard but I muffed taking it, the pressure was off and the fish for a moment and it shook free and swam away.

"You've got to think positively," Ernest scolded me. "You never get another chance when you let a good fish like that go."

"Superstition," we jeered.

"No, it's not," he said seriously, "it's just the way it it."

We went back to our scrabble game. I went on deck a few minutes later and jerked the line again. Was it coincidence? I had no sooner gone below again before "zinggggg!" it went again. There behind the boat jumped a glorious gold, green and blue monster.

This time Ernest pulled it in by hand. Susie took a turn around the winch and pulled in, or let it run, as instructed, and Nicola stood ready with the gaff. Once Ernest had it close up to the boat on his side it was powerless and soon gaffed and aboard. It was a 25-pound dorado, four feet long, with a dark green head 12 inches wide. We watched, a little sadly, as the brilliant colors faded.

It was only two days later that we caught a 27-pound wahoo, one of the mackerel family, on our heavy hand line. Safely boated he would not fit in the cockpit, not even diagonally. It was the longest fish we had ever caught. We had two very large meals from it and bottled 13 jars of fish in the pressure cooker. My diary entry for the day read:

'Only 10 bottling lids left. Big fish please steer clear."

In those first two weeks we caught two five-pound bonito, two large dorado and the long wahoo. These were the fish we boated, but as well as these there were many others which we almost caught. We had never had such concentrated fishing excitement.

One very hot day we had been travelling with a school of bonito all day. It was teatime and we were all lolling in exquisite comfort on the foredeck on cushions under an awning, a faint breeze over the bow providing a perfect temperature for doing absolutely nothing and just enough wind to self-steer. Nicola, remembering that I was a fishing fool, had attached a light line to the trailing fishing line at the stern and led it over the main cabin to where I lay supine. Nothing more was needed to complete my happiness.

A little later I went aft to refill the teapot and gave the line to Nicola. As I went below I heard her shout:

"Is that you, Mum?" She had felt a tug at the line and suspected me. She soon hauled in a nice bonito.

Passing through another school of bonito we found that sharks were travelling with them. Each time we hooked a fish and started to haul it in we could see the sharks coming, like a pack of wolves. Fast as we pulled in the fish the sharks moved faster. There would be a swirl in the water and next moment we would be pulling in a head, bitten off neatly below the gills.

We had never before seen so many sharks out at sea. Often we watched them swimming along in packs of three to six, lazily following the boat. Once one swam only a few feet behind the float and we could see, in the clear, still water, a remora attached to its side and two black and white pilot fish keeping station. As the shark swam deeper the white stripes on the pilot fish turned to deep blue.

On Sunday, April 14, our 14th day out from Panama, we crossed the imaginary line which was our outward course from Acapulco to the Galapagos. We had circumnavigated the world! We could hardly believe it.

To celebrate, out there in the middle of the ocean, 400 miles from the nearest land (which was still South America) and more than 3,000 miles from our destination of Hawaii, Ernest found a clean shirt and we three females put on long dresses and we sat in the cockpit sipping drinks and nibbling at nuts, cheese and smoked oysters before going below for our main meal of shrimp vol-au-vent with buttered asparagus followed by fruit salad and cream.

Next day we were back on fish pie, corned beef or canned stew-meat.

By the fourth week at sea we were beginning to feel the strain of the long passage. We felt as if we had been at sea forever and that we would never, never reach Hawaii.

Even our beloved Tryste came in for abuse:

"She's a three-hulled punk!" said Susie.

"What!"

"When you can stand on the top of the cabin and look to one end and turn round and look to the other — then she's a three-hulled punk," she explained. "I'd like to walk along a road, you know ... a road? With trees, big maple trees — and it's cold — but you don't feel cold, you feel healthy, not all hot and itchy and sweaty. Here we are in this tiny little boat in the middle of this great big ocean. What on earth are we doing here?"

We could not answer her. With each passing day the tension inside us mounted.

As the weather worsened our nervous state of mind was evidenced by Ernest doubling up the lifelines aft and re-issuing the orders that no one was to go on deck at night without telling someone else what they were doing. This strict rule did not, of course, apply to him, so that I sometimes woke terrified on the four-hour watch he took alone, to find that he was not in the saloon yet I could hear no sound on deck. Miraculously he was always still aboard.

I wrote in my diary:

"As far as I am concerned I can no longer bear to go sailing with the children. As soon as the wind begins to blow the strain of fearing that one of them will go overboard begins. It is too much." We had sailed too far in the one year.

The whole month of April had been spent at sea. When at last May the first dawned at least we could

KING FISHERMAN WINNERS HAVE A CHOICE

The 20th edition of the Colonist King Fisherman Contest ends tonight, but the excitement and tension is just starting.

In about 10 days, after all entries have been received from the more than 200 weigh-in stations, tickets representing all fish entered in the contest this year —nearly 30,000 of them—will be placed in a glass barrel.

A well known dignitary, assisted by CP Air officials, will roll the barrel and then draw out the lucky tickets.

First Colonist subscriber whose ticket is drawn from the barrel will win an expenses-paid trip for two via CP Air jet to Australia or Fiji. Or if they wish they can arrange to take in both Fiji and Australia. Expenses will be paid for five days of holidaying.

The winner will likely be announced Nov. 17.

There will be other prizes for grand hidden weight winners—like a cartop boat, a complete salmon fishing outfit from Wilson and Lenfesty, and a Peetz salmon trolling outfit from Peetz Tackle and Ski Shop.

But, the trip is the big prize.

Since 1959 Vancouver Islands anglers have been seeing the world with CP Air, courtesy of the Colonist King Fisherman Contest.

CP Air Takes Winners Around the World

Last year Ken and Lorna Steer won the trip to Mexico with a 7.4-pound coho caught off Brotchie Ledge on Sept. 9.

They took their prize trip in the spring of this year and were guests in Mexico City of the Mexican Tourist Advisory which took care of their every need.

They were met at the airport by an MTA representative and found their hotel, guide service and everything else arranged. They were taken by the MTA on guided tours of Mexico City and even went to lunch at the home of the president of MTA and later met the wife of their tour guide.

"They couldn't have been friendlier," said the Steers. "We enjoyed every minute of our trip. It is a different way of living."

They attended the bull fights in Mexico City and took in all the major tourists sights. Then they extended their trip to include the holiday resort cities of Mazatlan and Guadalajara.

"We went to the cock fights in Guadalajara. They were worse than the bull fights," exclaimed Lorna Steer.

It was Lorna's first air flight. "I enjoyed it and the service was excellent. Those stewardesses sure work," she said.

It was the fifth time King Fisherman winners have gone to Mexico, and the 15th King Fisherman CP Air trip.

Lorne Tyre won a trip to Hong Kong in 1972; Mrs. Ed Lohbrunner won a Japan trip in 1962; Carman Angus won a Holland-England trip in 1963; Young Russell Murcheson took his dad, Gus, to New Zealand in 1964; Mrs. Evelyn Zarelli won a Rome trip in 1965; Jack Fry won a Chile trip in 1966; Bill Stephenson won a Hawawii trip in 1968; Les Atchison won a Fiji trip in 1969; Robbie Bugden won a Hawaii trip in 1970; Len Crowhaw won an Amsterdam trip in 1971.

Bill Aldridge, Doug Dye and Carl Swanson won Mexico trips in 1959, 1960 and 1961. Sidney Kingston Smith won a Mexico trip in 1967.

Australia is a new King Fisherman destination and pleasant surprises await the winners in that land, which is heading towards becoming a number one tourist destination for Canadians.

Winners will land at Australia's Sydney, which is bigger than Toronto and has a natural setting that ranks it with San Francisco and Vancouver.

Australia's rim of beauty extends northward for more than 1,000 miles of almost end-to-end beaches into tropical Queensland with its Great Barrier Reef. Rolling hills and gum groves march westward into the Great Dividing Range before the hot, dry outback thins the settlements.

CP Air's Australian flights include a touchdown at Fiji and the winners will be able to arrange a stopover if they wish . . . and according to Les Atchison of Duncan, the last King Fisherman Fiji trip winner, no one should pass up the opportunity of a holiday in Fiji.

Bob McCulloch

MASTER LOG BUILDER

By GEORGE INGLIS

"Logs are my life," the young man said, smiling confidently. "Ever since I was a kid, roaming the forest and creek country of the Sooke Hills, I've dreamed of this thing – this feeling for trees and logs, for the outdoors, for nature in all its aspects.

This was Bob McCulloch speaking.

I had heard of his skill and flair as a log house builder; I had heard of his beautiful log home he has built in a secluded backwoods spot where the Florence Lake Road twists into the wild country on the edge of the Highlands.

I paid him a visit.

Robert C. McCulloch, 1085 Shaw, is an unusual character in this day and age of modernity-at-any-price. His is the free, self-reliant and independent spirit of the old musket-toting man of our early pioneering days. Disliking the environment of the city, he has chosen the woods of Vancouver Island for his life, and its forest trees for his occupation.

You can't even see the McCulloch log home from the road. A short, rough, gravelled, up-hill trail led me through the dense trees. Turning suddenly, the log house, with its thick, precision-placed logs, weathered and grey from the winds and the rain, rose before me, perfect in its rustic setting.

"How did you get interested in building log homes?" I asked.

"Well, there was this old guy up at Goldstream. He was a real old guy, building a log house for my best friend's folk. My chum and I were 10-11 years old at the time. We'd ask the old guy if he needed any help. He needed us around as much as a top-grade board needs two knotholes. But, he let us stay. We watched, worked along with him, then we started off on our own. We went back into the bush, felled a few light trees, peeled 'em, notched 'em like the old guy did. Then we built our first cabin — a tree fort.

"As we kids grew older," went on Bob McCulloch, "we used to go up into the Sooke Hills, stay there for two or three weeks, build a small log cabin, and live off the land. We took nothing with us but an axe, a knife, some matches and some fish hooks. We never caught any animals, but we'd fish the creeks, boil skunk cabbage and stinging nettles. We'd eat brook trout three or four times a day. We'd have a great time."

"What about bread?"

"Oh! no, we never bothered about bread."

"I guess," remembered Bob, "we must have built half-a-dozen of those small cabins back in the Sooke Hills. We'd build 'em, then leave 'em standing. Eventually, wherever we went fishing or hunting, we'd always have a cabin to go to. Just like the early old trappers, the old mountain men you read about."

Bob McCulloch, 33 years old, was born in Alberta, but he came to British Columbia when he was six months old. His wife, Shirley, originally came from Fort William, Ontario. They have two children, a seven-year-old boy, Raymond, and Tracy, their four-year-old daughter.

Bob McCulloch built his present log home five years ago. "How did you find this idyllic spot for your home?" I asked him.

"It was back almost 12 years ago, when I was single, and dreaming. I was driving around with a bunch of the guys, when I saw this For Sale sign tacked on to a tree. I stopped and looked. My pals scoffed, 'It will be too expensive.' I told him I didn't have too much money. He wanted to know what I proposed doing with the land. 'I'm more interested in what's going to be done with the property.'

"I told him I wanted to build myself a log house."

"Is that so?" he said. "Are you going to fall all the trees and clear it out?"

"No," I replied, "all I want to do is select and fall a few trees. I want to leave the rest all natural. I want my place to look like a park."

"The owner said, 'That's the person I want to buy this property. Name your price, within reason, and you can have it.' So, I said $1,500. He replied, 'Sure.' Thus I bought three acres for $1,500."

It is nice to think that there are people like that in the world.

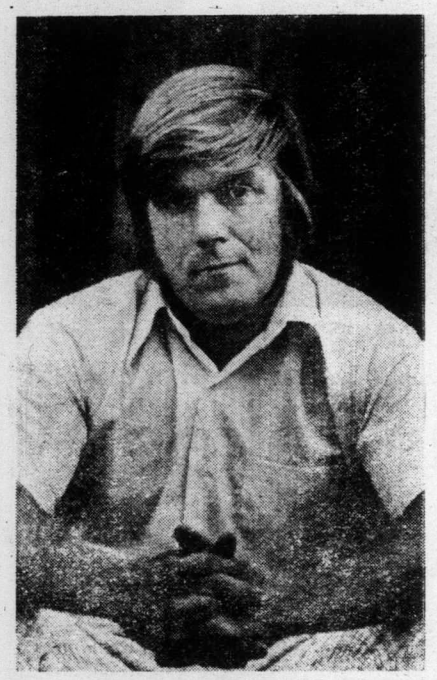
"How much of your log home did you build by yourself?" I asked.

"All of it," came the quick reply.

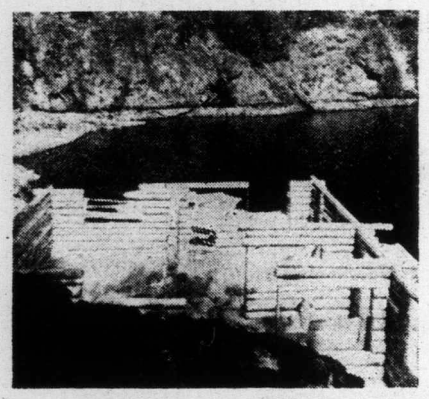
"How did you lift those top logs up?"

"By hand, mostly."

Bob explained further. "I lift one log end up, then the other. The long, high ones, I roll up on two poles. The logs in this house are all fir, cut on my land here, hauled by me to the mill for milling, brought back, and peeled by me. All the major framing, floor joists and roof rafters in this home, I cut myself, off my property right here. Even the fireplace rocks came off the property."



Bob McCulloch . . . confident, patient, with vision of world of forest and trees.



Nine-room log house under construction on shores of Finlayson Arm.

When Bob McCulloch took me into his huge living room, with its polished log walls, its timbered rafters and huge stone fireplace, with a wide stone apron before it, and two deep open recesses, one on each side, I gazed around in amazement. It was all so surprising, so warm feeling, so natural, so real. Supporting the cross rafters for the second storey were two tremendous polished pillars of wood, each the trunk of a fir tree. They flanked the fireplace.

Adding to the originality of the room, high up at the far right corner, balancing on an oak cross branch, crouched the intimidating form of a stuffed cougar. "I shot that one myself," laughed Bob. "Four of them were attacking a deer up in the Highlands. The other three got away. So did the deer."

I mentioned the two large, open fireside wood boxes. Bob chuckled: "That's something that will remain unfinished. One was to be for smoking fish, but my wife put her foot down. Figured there would be too much smell in the house."

Listening to this master log builder, I realized there are many things to learn about logs and log houses.

Bob McCulloch's list of log houses and log cabins to build, runs far ahead of him. "Most of the log houses I build run from 1,500 to 2,500 square feet," he said. Some people want two stories. That's tougher; they take longer to build. Any of the log homes I build, cost less than a frame or stucco house of the same footage, for there is really no upkeep to a log house once it is finished and you have a clear wood preserver on the inside walls. When I put up a log house, I always put wood preserver in all the notches I cut, because once you break wood, it rots.

"I usually put two-three coats of varnish on the inside walls. I leave the outside walls natural and they bleach in the sun, and go grey. I never put paint or varnish on the outside. If I did, it would peel and a man would be for ever coming back re-painting it every four years, just like a house. To be effective, a log house has got to look natural and blend in with its country surroundings. The greying process is completely natural."

Building log houses is a difficult art to learn, thinks Bob McCulloch. As a fluid rule, he tries to limit himself to building two a year. He has built seven to date, and a countless number of small log cabins.

His own house, he built five years ago. It has 3,500 square feet on two floors. The upstairs contains four bedrooms and a bathroom. He made the roof shakes himself. "As a matter of fact," he volunteered, "I've been making shakes in my spare time and selling them for the past 10 years."

After falling, milling, peeling and piling the logs to dry a bit, Bob begins to place them. Where the end of one log fits over another, he uses a saddle notch—like an inverted V, one up, next down—to create a binding form. To take care of shrinkage, he allows a two-inch space above doors and windows. Inevitably, the top logs settle right down to a close fit.

"Logs are always moving a bit," explained Bob. "You can't spike logs. They have to be left loose so that they settle. If you spiked two logs together, they would come apart after they dry out. Each row of logs is kept level, because when you get to the top of a wall you can't put an extra log on one side to level up. It won't work."

Bob has placed plenty of windows in his log home. "There's one thing about a log house," he told me. "You have got to have lots of window space, because logs are dark. If you don't have lots of windows, you ruin the effect. Unless, of course, you like living in a dungeon."

At this point, Bob McCulloch smiled a little wryly. "You need lots of patience to build log houses. You just can't throw them together. You have to whittle away at the logs to make a good fit. It's like carving. Sometimes, I get an awkward log and I'll have to work at it 15 different times to get it to fit properly. I never completely discard a log. They will always fit, eventually, if you try them hard enough."

Bob has developed some wrinkles of his own, which he incorporates into his log houses. "In the winter," he explained, "when it is damp outside, logs will swell up slightly. In summer-time, when logs dry up, they settle down again. So you see, a log house is always moving. Always, although you never notice it."

"Just like it was pulsing," I suggested.

"Exactly," replied Bob.

"My door jambs and window frames are all separate from the log walls," he explained. "My big window frames and door jambs are made with heavy four-inch cedar slabs. I bolt lengths of channel iron to the outside frame. Then, I fit them in with pieces of channel iron knocked into the log wall face so that they are absolutely separate from the walls. Like they were riding on rails. In this way, there is no binding. The frames stay level with the logs at all times during winter and summer moisture changes."

Robert McCulloch's log-building reputation is growing fast. He has built a log house as far north as Qualicum. Next summer, he is going to load his family into his house trailer and take off for Lumby, in the Okanagan country, to build another. "Take me about two months," he laughed, "I think I'll turn it into a bit of a holiday. Take my fishing rod with me."

He has a request to go far north and build a big log house up at Prince George, B.C. "I think that's a bit too far," he said. Presently, Bob is building one close to Hall's Boat House, by the Malahat.

Bob McCulloch loves to fish and hunt. "When I was younger, my chum and I would disappear into the woods with our canoe. For excitement, we ran rivers all over the island. Back in the wilderness, we'd fly-fish for trout. Every cast a two to three-pounder. Beautiful. On a fly rod with a light leader, there's nothing better."

His latest interest is bow-hunting. "I've joined the Fish and Game Bow-Hunters Club, but I think I'm just as happy going on my own. I like to hunt in the snow best."

"The biggest sports thrill I ever had, I think," smiled Bob, "was when I was a kid of twelve, and I shot a deer. I shot it with a home-made bow and a home-made willow arrow. My chum and I, we dragged it home. Our folks wouldn't believe it, at first. You know, a couple of kids with a couple of sticks, and they shot a deer."

Log building is a special art.

"You can't go ahead and build like a carpenter building a frame house," explained Bob. "You just can't do that when you build a log house. You put one log up there, fit that log, go to the next log, and you fit that. I've worked all day on one log, one little log about four feet long, with a notch in it, to get it to fit, because the one going over the top of it was a weird one."

"It's quite a challenge," I suggested.

"Oh! yes. When I'm fitting logs, if one doesn't fit right, I don't feel right. If it fits good, I feel good. I find I put part of myself into every log house I build."

"Nobody could do this kind of work if they didn't have patience or a feeling for their work," I said.

"That's right," replied Bob. "You get so that you almost know a log inside out."

"To do this," I said slowly, "you've got to be a country boy at heart."

Bob smiled. "I guess," he said simply.

Treats for Halloween Ca

THOUGHT FOR FOOD

The goblins will get you if you don't watch out! Halloween! The night when witches ride on broomsticks, spooks cavort and howling things are prowling about. But don't be fooled by ghostly garb and frightful masks . . . underneath are lively little humans with big appetites after an evening of witching.

Halloween is apple time, popcorn time, and pumpkin time. So it's well to have a stock of these on hand. Besides these your pre-Halloween shopping list may include raisins in little packages, candy in bars or bags, individually wrapped candy (we used to call them kisses) are easy to hand out, peanuts in the shell or shelled in little packages. Food is an important part of Halloween so one has to be prepared.

McIntosh apples in the handy pack are just right for handouts, not too big.

Candy apples are always popular but be sure you have those little see-through baggies to put them in if they are for handouts. Otherwise they could end up a sticky mess in those caverness bags carried by all the little Halloween people for their loot.

About the quickest, foolproof way to do these apples is to melt a 14-ounce pack of caramels in the top of a double boiler with two tablespoons water. Wash and dry about six medium-size apples. Remove stem. Insert a wooden skewer in the stem end of each apple.

When caramels are melted and blended with water, dip each apple in the syrup, twirling to get them well coated. Let as much syrup as possible drip off before placing them on foil to cool and harden.

If you are having a party and sitting children down to a table here is an interesting way to fix apples. A plate of these could double for a centrepiece until it's time for dessert.

PUMPKIN APPLES . . . eight medium-sized apples, green pepper tops, raisins, one cup pineapple juice and yellow and red food coloring.

Pour pineapple juice in a bowl, and enough red and yellow food coloring to make a deep orange colored juice. Peel and remove core from apples, leaving the bottom of the core in the apple. With a sharp paring knife start at the top of the apple and score apple's surface with thin lines resembling the traditional pumpkin. Dip apples in fruit juice, turning until they absorb a nice orange color. Remove and drain. Fill centres with raisins. Top with stems cut from green peppers.

Arrange these pumpkin apples on a large serving plate with some candy corn and raisins. Or you could arrange them on some large (washed) green leaves.

What would Halloween be without popcorn? Like just "plain corn" it has been around for a long time.

When Columbus landed at San Salvador he was met by natives wearing edible popcorn necklaces. Popcorn is not only fun food, it is a nourishing product. It has some calories . . . one quart popcorn adds up to 100 calories which supply the body with heat and energy. Its cellulose content supplies necessary roughage, corn has some protein too.

For handouts what would be nicer than popcorn balls?

QUICK MOLASSES POPCORN BALLS . . . three quarts popped corn, one cup light molasses, one cup sugar, one-half teaspoon salt and one teaspoon vanilla. Keep popped corn warm in a 250-degree F oven while you make the syrup. Mix together the molasses, sugar and salt. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly until it comes to a boil. Cook without stirring for four minutes. Remove from heat, stir in vanilla.

DEAR HELOISE:

How to maintain good-looking shoes:

Get those metal sole plates put on the toes before you wear the shoes.

Polish all patents and man-made hard-finish shoes with spray furniture polish. A shoe repairman told me this and he said to put the spray on a cloth, not directly on the shoe.

Always use a shoehorn. Never put on your shoes without one—they'll last twice as long and look twice as good. Get one of those long shoehorns so you don't even have to bend over.

When you take off your shoes, leave them sitting out for an hour or more so they won't be damp when you put them away. Spray the inside with shoe deodorant before putting away.

Never wear your shoes without polishing them first. Never put them away for the season without first taking them to the shop for any needed repairs.

If you're crowded for space, hang a six-pair shoe rack on a skirt hanger—the kind with the metal clips. I've had mine for ten years. The cloth ones last longer than the plastic ones—sew one if you can sew. Hang them in one end of your closet.

toss and mix to distribute evenly. When cool enough to handle but still quite warm, shape into balls. A little butter on your hands helps. Let stand in a warm place until cool and they will loose their stickiness. Wrap each ball in plastic film or small plastic bag. Tie securely. Store in tightly covered container.

Recipe makes about 10 two-and-a-half-inch balls. If you wish light-colored balls use light corn syrup instead of the molasses. You can buy hulless corn . . . white hulless popping corn in the blue tins and yellow corn in the red tins.

You may want to make bowls of seasoned popcorn, several seasonings may be used.

Seasoned Popcorn . . . two-and-a-half quarts popped corn, one-quarter cup butter or margarine and seasonings of your choice . . .

Onion Popcorn . . . empty envelope of dry onion soup mix into a small bowl. Stir with a fork to distribute evenly. If onion pieces very large crush or snip into smaller pieces.

Sprinkle three tablespoons of mix over warm buttered corn. Toss well to mix. Use a larger quantity of popped corn if you want to use up the whole envelope of mix.

Seasoned Salt is great on popped corn . . . use one teaspoon of the seasoned salt to the two-and-a-half quarts buttered popcorn.

Children would like cinnamon seasoned popcorn . . . sprinkle buttered popcorn with two tablespoons colored sugar crystals mixed with one-half teaspoon cinnamon and one-half teaspoon salt. Toss well to mix.

Of course you'll be making a pumpkin Jack-o-lantern but whatever you do don't throw the pulp away afterwards. It is very good food and should not be wasted.

Halve or quarter pumpkin and remove seeds and stringy portions. Cut into small pieces, cut off the rind. It is easier to cut skin off small pieces rather than try to peel large pieces. Cook, covered in a small amount of lightly salted boiling water for 25 to 30 minutes. Drain, wash well, turn into strainer and let drain about 30 minutes.

This pumpkin can be used as a vegetable served with butter, seasoned pepper and salt. It can be used in muffins, in loaf cakes or in pies. For the muffins or loaf cake you can use your applesauce cake recipe and just substitute the pumpkin for the applesauce called for. You can freeze the cooked pumpkin in cartons for later use. For pre-Halloween pumpkin products use canned ready-to-use pumpkin.

Pumpkin Tarts are good party fare.....

Pumpkin Chiffon Tarts . . . 12 baked tart shells, two cups cooked pumpkin, one cup light brown sugar, one cup light cream scalded, (or use undiluted evaporated milk), three eggs separated, one-half teaspoon each salt, nutmeg and mace, one teaspoon ginger, one-eighth teaspoon cloves, one-and-a-half teaspoons cinnamon, three tablespoons cornstarch, two tablespoons white sugar and whipped cream.

Beat one egg and two egg yolks light in color. Combine pumpkin, brown sugar, salt, spices, cornstarch. When blended add beaten eggs and scalded cream. Cook in double boiler until thickened, about 20 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Cool the filling. Beat egg whites until stiff, gradually add the two tablespoons white sugar and beat until glossy. Fold into the cooled pumpkin mixtures. Spoon into baked tart shells. Top with a dollop of whipped cream.

Get into the spirit of Halloween and have fun.

BRIDE'S CORNER

HINTS

Make special whopper cookies for handouts. Wrap each in orange cellophane and fasten with a black cat sticker.

If you are pressed for time, what's easier than polished red apples?

If you have lots of time, make small colored nylon net bags for filling with wrapped candies or cookies.

Get into the spirit of Halloween and make a Jack-o-lantern for your doorstep. A little squat candle inside burns for a long time.

To frost Halloween cookies mix red and yellow food coloring into confectioners' sugar. Make the right consistency to spread with milk or water. Make raisin faces or draw on iced cookies with melted chocolate.

DEAR HELOISE:

Many children seem to have a "thing" against eating vegetables. Here is a method that has helped me introduce new vegetables and other foods to my children — and get them to eat them.

It is simply this: Don't give them any. Why make them suffer? Eat them yourself. Enjoy it!

After doing this three or four times, allow them to have some. Usually they will have already convinced themselves that it must be really good or you wouldn't have been eating — and enjoying — whatever it is that's so good.

I have five children ranging in age from 4 to 15 years of age. After wasting countless hours "lecturing" them on various subjects I wanted them to know and understand, I hit on a system that seems to work.

Whenever I find an item in the newspaper or a magazine that pertains to a certain subject we've talked about, or something peculiar to our family, I cut it out and tack it on the kitchen door.

The first time I did this, each one asked why the article was

It's amazing how these articles draw their attention and get them to realize that other people have the same problems we have and that I am not making up things to get them to do what I want.

Customs officer, packer, miner, banker and MLA: none could accuse Robert T. Smith, pioneer, of having led an inactive or uninteresting life. But if Smith's career was exciting, it also seems to have been plagued by misfortune. When he died, tragically and violently, he had been thwarted by success almost to the very end.

DEATH CAME IN SHOOTOUT

Smith Was On Blacklist

A century and some after Smith appears to have been something of a Quixotic figure. Big, bluff and quick to take exception, his temper, more than once, got him into serious difficulty. But, to those who knew him, he was honest, reliable and a loyal friend; as quick to lend a helping hand as he was to take offence, and a staunch supporter when the chips were down.

Perhaps the most famous example of his volatile temperament was the time he let his objections be known to a Royal City newspaper editor —with the blunt end of his walking stick. For the hapless editor, the incident resulted in hospitalization; for Smith, a day in court.

The story behind this intriguing incident began with the rivalry between Victoria and New Westminster, then capital cities of the crown colonies of Vancouver Island, and mainland British Columbia, respectively, as to which community would be the single capital of the united colony of B.C. Victoria, as most are aware, won the honor, and that was that. But Westminster residents did not take the disaster lightly. Rather, they resented the move to the extent of holding mass rallies and burning, in effigy, the members of the legislative assembly who had, in their wisdom, voted against the Royal City.

One of those who voted in favor of Victoria was Robert T. Smith, member for Cariboo. When the local British Columbian, for the edification of those of its readers who as yet did not know who had betrayed them, published something of a blacklist in its columns, the name SMITH appeared in capitals, between the drawing of two hands.

Smith, who had shrugged off public ridicule, and laughed at a threat made against his life, was outraged by the editor's cheek. He had, he said, agreed that Victoria was more suitable as capital after due consideration, and after reviewing all of the facts. He had voted fairly and honestly, to the best of his ability.

That New Westminster citizens would be upset, he could understand. But when the Columbian "held him up to scorn and contempt," that was going too far.

When, a week after, the vote was made official, and Victoria chosen the one and only capital of British Columbia, the Columbian struck again, SMITH appearing between two hands. Thus, Smith's fateful meeting with the fourth estate when he waylaid the Columbian's editor and, without so much as a formal introduction, proceeded to beat the newsman to a pulp.

Curiously, in an age when journalism was not only golden, but downright yellow at times, and when libel laws were next to nonexistent, the Columbian had shown rather admirable restraint in its treatment of a man for whom it had little regard.

It, as had every other paper of its day, had used stronger language in dealing with its editorial antagonists, to say the least. Whatever, the use of Smith's name in vain struck that gentleman as being the most despicable of behaviour, for which there was only one cure—the heavy end of his cane. The court, unsympathetic, found for the plaintiff and fined Smith for his unsportsmanlike conduct.

R. T. Smith's second claim to fame in provincial history is his involvement with Victoria's "perfect crime," the robbery of Macdonald's Bank.

Briefly told, the stage for this drama was set back in 1859, when handsome, bearded Alexander Macdonald arrived in Victoria and opened the colony's first banking house. Setting up shop at Yates and Wharf, Macdonald and company offered a complete list of services, issued its own banknotes, and even boasted a general store on the side. When business prospered, Macdonald branched out, building a sawmill at Port Douglas, and erecting a beautiful mansion at Douglas and Michigan.

Although the arrival of competing, and more established, banks cut into Macdonald's profits towards the end of 1862, he appeared to survive in comfort. Two years later, in 1864, new government legislation gave Macdonald until Mar. 31, 1865, to obtain a royal charter or to petition the legislative assembly for authority to continue business after that date.

Poor Macdonald failed to meet either requirement when, on the night of Sept. 22-23, 1864, thieves broke into his bank and escaped with more than $30,000.

Victorians were astounded by the robbery which, to this day, remains unsolved. Suffice it to say, although several, particularly Macdonald, who fled the country when the bank immediately foundered, were suspected of having committed the deed, no one was formally charged. Whatever, the night before the burglary, three men had been hard at work in the bank: John Waddell, acting as manager while Macdonald attended to business at the Cariboo branch; clerk and bookkeeper Josiah Barnett; and the bank's agent, Robert T. Smith.

Until 10 o'clock that evening, the men prepared a shipment of coin and notes which Smith was to take to the Richfield branch on the morning steamer. Upon completion of the amount, totalling more than $30,000 in gold coins, dust, currency and silver, the treausre was placed in the heavy safe inside the fireproof vault.

As investigating officers later pieced together the night's events: "The safe and vault were then locked by Mr. Barnett, who brought the vault key to Mr. Waddell, stating that he had not taken out the metal slide or plug which prevents the safe lock from being picked as, although Mr. Macdonald had once shown him how to take it out and put it in, he had forgotten how to do it."

Curiously, Waddell did not know the secret of operating the lock guard either, with the result that, when Waddell, Barnett and Smith left the premises at 10 o'clock, the safe was locked, but its protective slide had not been positioned.

Early the next morning, a janitor found that the office had been ransacked, the safe opened "without difficulty," thanks to the key guard not being in place. After a major scandal, and an ineffective police investigation, the great Macdonald bank robbery was history.

For many of the bank's depositors, and Macdonald's personal creditors, the robbery, and subsequent bankruptcy of Macdonald's financial empire, meant heavy losses. For agent R. T. Smith, the disaster meant not only that he was unemployed, but that he was out the sum of $13,000 which he apparently had invested in the firm. Thus, as far as he was concerned, Victoria's "perfect crime" was a doubly bitter pill.

By T. W. PATERSON

Four years after, Smith embarked on the little screw steamer George S. Wright, for Portland. Among his fellow passengers that voyage was pioneer B.C. journalist D. W. Higgins, whom he had met before. Almost half a century after, Higgins recalled the southbound voyage. Upon meeting Smith at the ticket counter, the two remained together until Portland, when they boarded the San Francisco-bound steamer Continental. During their five-day stopover at Portland, both came to the conclusion that the Continental was anything but safe. Unhappily, she was the only ship available and, like it or not, they had no choice but to board her.

Their fears as to the Continental's seaworthiness soon proved to be well-founded as, once over the Columbia River Bar, the vessel encountered heavy weather and lumbered sluggishly, her "aged lumber cracking and shaking as if with fright." As the Continental wallowed in the waves, her decks awash, Smith and Higgins huddled abaft her smokestack. Unable to carry on a conversation, due to the screeching of the wind, they cowered in the comparative shelter of the funnel, where they witnessed a scene which remained with Higgins for the rest of his life.

"The noise and confusion caused by the storm were so great that we could scarcely hear each other speak; but high above the tumult rose the voice of the captain," he recounted. "He was the greatest brute and most profance man I ever met. His treatment of his sailors was infamous; for the slightest infraction he would strike or kick an unfortunate man in a brutal manner. To his passengers he was curt, insulting and overbearing. No one could get a simple answer to a simple question. The simplest request for something that would add to the comfort or relief of a sick person was refused with an oath which for ingenuity of construction and manner of expression surpassed any profanity I every heard . . ."

This was the evil mariner whose roar was to be heard over that of the storm, as he stalked the Continental's decks and barked orders to his seamen. Once the storm had passed and the steamer proceeded southward, it was found that her seams had parted in the gale, causing her to answer reluctantly to her helm. With her increasing recalcitrance, the captain's impatience grew, and he cursed his crewmen steadily. Upon sighting a Jewish passenger on deck, he cursed him too, ordering him below until San Francisco with a warning as to what might happen should he again wander on deck.

Suddenly aware that he was being watched, the captain turned and glared at his audience of two, Higgins and Smith glowering back with open distaste.

"What in the hell are you doing there?" roared the captain. "Get down below, damn you!"

"Are you speaking to me?" Smith asked indifferently.

When the blasphemous mariner again ordered them below, advancing with a menacing expression, Smith calmly stood his ground. Just then, a lurching of the ship threw a passing seaman against his superior, who, beside himself with rage, began to beat him with his fists; at least, such was his intent, his assault being cut short when the crewman pulled a large knife. Instantly, the captain backed off, the blustering bully of a few moments before becoming a quivering coward.

But the man was not to be denied and, stalking his prey, he lunged forward. The captain turned and ran, the murderous sailor and sheath-knife at his heels. Seconds later, as Smith and Higgins watched, transfixed, the captain and his pursuer circled the deck and were on their second lap about the ship, then a third. Despite the captain's screams for help, not a single crewman went to his assistance, and he was fast running out of breath, the gap between hunter and hunted rapidly closing, when Smith, moving swiftly, caught the would-be assasin by the arm. With a flick of his wrist, the man was disarmed, his knife over the rail.

The seaman then turned his attention to Smith, the burly passenger soon wrestled him to the deck, where he lay exhausted. At this sudden turn of events, the captain regained his courage and, ignoring Smith's and Higgins' violent protests, proceeded to kick the man's face into an unrecognizable pulp, when the cowardly crew put him in irons in the forecastle.

"Smith and I," said Higgins, "turned away sick at heart at the cowardice and brutality of the captain and the time-serving crew, who as soon as the sailor had fallen into the clutches of the captain, assisted in carrying him to the forecastle and imprisoning him. While the chase was on, they had wished him success. We remained on deck and came and went as we pleased, and the captain did not again molest us, nor did he thank Smith for his life or speak to us at all until we reached San Francisco. The incident with the sailor had humbled him somewhat, and he treated the passengers with some consideration; but he was as hard as ever on the crew."

Upon the decrepit Continental's docking in the Bay City, Smith and Higgins parted, each going their own way. When next the journalist heard of Smith, he was in Utah and, according to Smith a financial success at last, but in love with the territorial lieutenant-governor's daughter.

Alas, it was too good to be true, poor Smith's luck holding true to form. Although he had become rich, the object of his affections rejected his proposal of marriage. In fact, the young lady, who, until that time, had given him every encouragement, dismissed him from her life rather coldly. When the bewildered suitor asked why the abrupt change of heart, she simply referred him to his rival, a Dr. Snedecker.

With famous temper to the fore, Smith called upon that gentleman. Just what Snedecker had to say is not known, although it was a matter of public record that, when R. T. Smith left him, he was livid and loudly informed the doctor that "Utah was not big enough to hold them both."

Ironically, not two days after, both rivals chanced to board the same train at the same station at the same moment. According to the record: "They glared at each other, hot words were exchanged, and both drew their pistols."

Although older, Dr. Snedecker seems to have been the more agile, as he was first to draw and fire, his pistol ball striking Smith in the chest and puncturing a lung. Crashing backward to the floor, Smith struggled with his dying breath to raise his gun. Although dying, with a superhuman effort, he aimed and fired. A second after, he was dead; unaware that his single shot had caught Snedecker in the heart, "the enemies breathing their last sighs at the same moment."

With that, Robert T. Smith belonged to the ages, his vast wealth, Higgins noted, passing to needy relatives in Scotland. The newsman could only hope that the ill-fated Smith's heirs enjoyed happier circumstances than the bluff but warm-hearted pioneer whose death in a Wild West shootout ended a remarkable, and tragic, career.

Sometimes now as Joan Andre looks from her window out over the fields and orchards and the far hills, she sees, in her mind's eye, the towering peaks of the Himalayas, the long sun-warmed trail climbing far above the gorges where the swift rivers run, climbing ever upwards towards the snow-crowned peaks of Everest. Less than a year ago she was actually walking along this trail, quite alone, unaccompanied even by a Sherpa guide as is generally the case.

HOLIDAY for JOAN

Joan has always been keenly interested in the east and in the eastern religions and has practiced Yoga since she took night classes four years ago at Camosun College with Gordon Limbrick. She does the Yoga exercises, meditates after her own fashion, she smiles, and believes strongly in what she does.

One day last summer she was talking with friends, Maurice and Veronica Borrelly.

Maurice is a photographer with Beautiful B.C. magazine and they have done a great deal of travelling. They remarked that this year they would be holidaying in Nepal. At this time Joan had not dreamed of a holiday for herself. Her time had been fully taken up with her four children and her very clever and busy husband, Jean, chief of exhibits with the provincial musuem in Victoria.

Her friends said they would be trekking in the Himalayas and they must have seen something in Joan's dark eyes, something of her longing, something of an unfulfilled dream, for they said quite casually: "Why don't you come with us?"

This was six months before their date of departure — they were to leave in November, the best time of year to visit that part of the world. The monsoons would be over but it would still be warm.

The seed was planted in Joan's mind, but she still never dreamed she would go. She had to decide by the end of September and have the necessary shots.

Slowly the dream became a reality.

Jean said: "Why not?" and undertook to manage the house and care for the children, Jacques, 15, Charles, 13, Bianca, 11, and Yvette, 9.

Finances were not a problem as Joan had worked the previous year as a key punch operator for B.C. Medical.

On Nov. 6 Joan flew to New York where she met her friends and connected with the Air India flight for Delhi. She had flown to France in 1957 to visit Jean's family but the 747 was very impressive.

"Almost immediately," she says, "I was in a foreign country — India." The music was Indian, the food Indian, and the hostesses gorgeous in their silken saris. Amongst other exotic dishes she enjoyed chicken curry, very hot, lichees and tangerines with whipped cream.

After stops in London, Paris, Rome and Beirut they landed in Delhi. In Beirut she saw her first Arab in native dress and knew she was really now in the east which had for so long held a fascination for her.

They spent three days in Delhi, visited Gandhi's memorial and drove to Agra where they were entranced with the beauty of the Taj Mahal. On the way she and Veronica had a ride on a gorgeously caparisoned elephant.

In Delhi she was oppressed by the crowds and aghast at the utterly unbelievable poverty, the hopelessness in the faces of the countless beggars. The beautiful temples, cool and peaceful, were such a contrast to the crowded streets where pedestrians, motor bikes and scooters, horse-drawn carts, bullock carts and rickshas fought for the right of way.

The wild driving was another fearsome thing and their taxi was in a minor accident on the trip from the airport to the hotel and on the way to Agra they witnessed a dreadful accident in which a Kathmandu official was killed.

On their fourth day in India they took the Royal Nepal airlines flight to Kathmandu.

Slowly the snow-clad peaks of the Himalayas emerged and drew nearer. They came in to the Kathmandu valley and Joan looked down on the terraced hillsides where grew rice, wheat, barley and sugar cane. Grapefruit trees, bananas and orange trees grew there and she marvelled at the huge size of the poinsettia trees.

She and her friends stayed at the Blue Star hotel which was a medium priced place — $7 a day or 70 Nepalese rupees and within walking distance of the centre of the city.

In Delhi she had been oppressed by the crowds and the poverty, but here in Nepal, in this green and fertile valley, the people seemed much more vital and alive and there was laughter in the streets.

Nepal is a Hindu kingdom where both Buddhist and Hindu religions are very strong but they live compatibly side by side, even to using the same temples.

They spent several days in Kathmandu, walking throughout the city, exploring parks and temples. Joan was particularly interested in the Tibetan refugee camps where she watched them making their beautiful carpets, from the spinning and dyeing of the wool to the finished product.

She visited a Canadian missionary whose address had been given to her by a friend, Miss Doris Anderson, of Salt Spring Island. This missionary was a charming woman married to an Anglo-Asian who was almost blind and who preached in the Christian church. She managed a family of some 20 orphans and Joan was impressed by her tremendous faith which appeared to be almost their sole support.

She believed they would be provided for and they were due in part to Miss Anderson who spends a great deal of her time raising funds for the mission. Her chief project is picking salal on Salt Spring, the proceeds from which all go to Kathmandu.

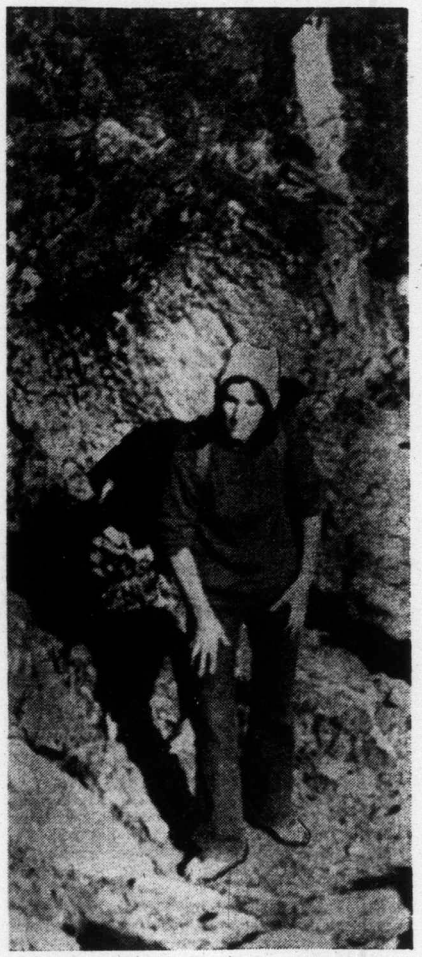
Joan now learned that her friends had decided against trekking into the mountains, so they parted company for the time being. She went to the Sherpa society in Kathmandu to make arrangements for her trip.

In addition to her Nepalese visa she had to have a trekking permit which she obtained at the immigration office. She had brought her boots from Canada, but she rented a sleeping bag and a rucksack and bought three bars of chocolate, a package of cheese, a loaf of bread, a tin of nuts and some cookies. She was assured that she might stay in the Sherpa huts for very little money. She was going alone as at that time no party seemed to be going.

She flew in to Lukla, an airstrip and a few huts on the side of a hill — the Sherpa capital of the world—on a little Canadian Otter plane and from Lukla one morning she set out on her solitary trek. There were no roads but a good walking trail as this is the main route to Everest, many of the better bridges having been put in by Sir Edmund Hilary himself.

"What were your feelings as you set out?" we inquired. "I felt uplifted, amazed to find myself where I was," she replied. The trail followed a beautiful river valley at first and that night she spent in a Sherpa hut, or tea house, as they are called, after walking steadily from 11 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. with only a 20 minute stop.

At the tea house the Sherpa family gave her dinner — wild rice, vegetable curry, greens, potatoes, cabbage spiced with turmeric, yak butter and very sweet tea with milk. All this was cooked over an open fire in the main room, very smokey as there were no chimneys.



JOAN ANDRE . . . on Everest Trail

She paid 50 cents for the meal and 10 cents to sleep on a wooden bench upon which she spread her sleeping bag. She shared her room with a Swiss couple whose Sherpa porter slept with the family. The Sherpas never sleep in the tea houses.

Invariably Joan was asked how she came to be travelling alone and she explained that she had not had time to arrange otherwise. She had a good map and decided she did not need a guide and never for a moment, she says, was she afraid.

By MARGARET WILLIAMS

On the second day she set out at 8 o'clock on a breakfast consisting of nothing but tea. Her bread and cheese she ate later on the trail, sitting against a sun-warmed stone wall.

She crossed the Dudhkosi river several times on very rickety bridges. She listened to the singing of innumerable birds, the hum of insects and revelled in the beautiful wild flowers along the trail, but always, she remarks, there was a cold wind whipping round the mountain passes.

This day the trail took her up the side of a mountain, switch-backing the whole way, to Namche Bazar, 12,000 feet up, 2,000 feet higher than Lukla. She did not stop at Namche except to go through a check post.

The trail around the side of a mountain, the swift river far below a mere thread of silver. Around her the peaks rose, 20,000 feet or more. Along the trail were rocks of all sizes carved by the Lamas over the centuries with Tibetan prayers and large and small prayer wheels, powered by the river water, turned ceaselessly, containing the printed prayer of the Buddhists — OM MANI PADME HUM—The jewel is in the lotus.

She met many quietly grazing yaks along the way, others in pack trains. The yaks, Joan learned, can only exist at an altitude above 12,000 feet. Once she met a delightful old Sherpa in his native dress, spinning industriously as he walked. He was accompanied by a young boy in western dress. The children, she found, all speak English and a little French.

She spent another night in a Sherpa tea house which was surrounded by large spinning prayer wheels, each in its own tiny house. Here she again shared her quarters with a Swiss couple and this night she heard the Sherpas talking in their own language and she noticed that the host kept mentioning names of cities such as London, Paris, New York, Bangkok and Tokyo and she was surprised to later discover that this man had actually flown with Hilary around the world when he was taking the Yeti scalps to be examined by various experts in the museums.

She afterwards saw his picture, with his wife and child, in the book High in the Cold Thin Air, written by Edmund Hilary and Desmond Doig.

A party of Europeans, accompanied by a large number of Sherpas had camped nearby that night and Joan awoke that morning to the lovely sound of the Sherpas at prayer, the chanting rising and falling on the crystal air.

On the third day, leaving her pack at the tea house, she set out to reach the monastery at Tengboche at an altitude of 12,715 feet. Here she spoke to the head Lama through a small boy who spoke English. She was allowed to enter the monastery to look at the many images of the Buddha and the paintings on cloth of religious themes depicting incidents in the life of Buddha or of great Lamas. From the monastery she could see Everest and it looked very small from this distance.

It was now time for Joan to turn back and over the next three days she reluctantly retraced her steps to Lukla where she took the plane back to Kathmandu.

Here she rejoined her friends for the flight back to Delhi. They went on to Bombay and ended the trip by staying at the grandest hotel in Bombay, the Taj Mahal, where her windows overlooked the harbor, busy with ships and freighters from the far corners of the world. It was, she remarks, a tremendous contrast to her days on the Everest trail but somehow a fitting ending.

Joan remembers many things about her trek — the warm days and the cold nights in the mountains, the singing of birds and the hum of the bees. These were very large and were the one thing that rather frightened her. Their huge nests hung from the cliffs over the river. She hears again the melodious calling of the boys who herded the goats and the yaks, the lovely sound echoing down the valleys, and she remembers the woman in the Sherpa hut, sitting cross-legged while nursing her child, rocking him with a peculiar springing motion.

She brought home some well-chosen souvenirs, a bronze Lama and temple bell, a Dorje — a brass symbol used in Buddhist temple ceremonies — a Tibetan knife and chopsticks in a brass and wooden case.

She has a small carved prayer wheel to remind her of the great spinning wheels along the trail, and a brass bowl used for water offerings in the temples and a number of fascinating pots from the Kathmandu pottery market.

Joan was attracted by the simplicity of the lives of the people she met and moved by the way in which religion is so much a part of their daily lives but she feels, too, back in her home with her family on the Old West Saanich Road, how very lucky she is to have the life she has in this, her own country.

Another Nail In Literary Coffin

Reviewed by WARREN CARAGATA

Richard Rohmer is a good story-teller — it's only too bad that as chairman of the Royal Commission on Publishing, he never learned to write.

Richard Rohmer, you remember him, the Toronto lawyer and Arctic promoter who wrote a Canadian best seller last winter about the Americans annexing Canada because we wouldn't give them our gas and oil.

He has now added another nail to the Canadian literary coffin by writing the sequel to Ultimatum — last year's oil crisis marvel.

The title of this gem is Exxoneration, a clever play on words that unfortunately doesn't exonerate Rohmer from trying his best to destroy the novel as art form.

However, to give him some credit, he does rescue Canada from the annexation attempt by the Americans, but through a device that never really seems plausible — the Yankees just land their huge troop-carrying aircraft at Malton without bothering to see if the Canadians have taken any steps to prevent that from happening, and — we tricked them by having missile-equipped troops over every inch of airport surface.

Making the Americans look stupid is an honorable task, but surely Rohmer could stick a little closer to reality to do that.

Reading Exxoneration doesn't take very long, it's only about 200 pages, and although it pains me to say it, the novel had a good enough story line to keep me reading.

Exxoneration, by Richard Rohmer; McClelland & Stewart; 218 pages; $8.95.

The plot deals with an attempt by the Canadian government and its oil corporation, Petrocan, to buy out Exxon in order to get Canadian hands on Imperial Oil, which Exxon owns. That little purchase will cost Canada more than $20 billion and allows Rohmer to take us all to Zurich for a bit of breathless prose while the heady financing is arranged.

It's not a rich novel — no subplots, a climax that never comes, flat characterization, painful description and primitively-done dialogue.

It hangs together enough to make it slightly readable, but with some luck, Richard Rohmer will go back to his law desk and write briefs.

Cuban Women Talk About Their Liberation

The Women's Press announces the publication of Cuban Women Now, by Margaret Randall. Twenty-five Cuban women describe in their own terms the profound changes in every aspect of their lives since the triumph of the revolution on Jan. 1, 1959.

Cuban Women Now; 375 pages, 23 photographs; paper only $5.50; Co-published by the Canadian Women's Educational Press and Dumont Graphix.

Women have economic independence in Cuba now. This independence has spurred on the struggles against "machismo" and the traditional role of women as wives and mothers.

Cuban women understand the liberation of women as integral to the building of the socialist society in their country. They recognize in their interviews the progress that has been made in Cuba as demonstrated in their own situations, and they are equally aware of changes yet to be made before women can make a truly equal contribution.

To North Americans concerned with the liberation of women, the experiences of Cuban women make priorities clearer through practical example. Cultural assumptions that discriminate against women are changing in Cuba now precisely because of the recognition of the necessity of equal economic involvement of women. Women workers are crucial: thus, culture is changed by necessity.

Growing out of the economic independence of women, assumptions about the nature of the family are now being seriously re-examined in Cuba. The problem of women's "second job"—the maintanence of the home and family—has become the focus of public discussion. A revision of Cuban Family Code is now being proposed that would make it punishable by law for men not to share equally in housework and child care.

This exciting development is the subject of a short afterword to Cuban Women Now, published by the Women's Press, 280 Bloor Street West, No. 305, Toronto.

Margaret Randall was born in the United States, lived in Mexico for several years and has been resident in Cuba since October 1969. In her five years in Cuba she has worked for the Cuban Book Institute as well as writing several books.

Cuban Women Now has been published in Spanish in both Cuba and Mexico and will soon be published in Italian and Portugese. Part of the Solution, a collection of diaries and poetry, and a small book of poems, WITH OUR HANDS (new star books, Vancouver) have appeared in English.

Calendar Features Canadian Photographs

NATURE 75, A Canadian Calendar, has been published by Van Nostrand Reinhold Ltd. in co-operation with The Federation of Ontario Naturalists.

This month-by-month portfolio celebrating the beauty of Canadian nature is even more striking than the highly successful 1974 nature calendar. Twelve beautiful and unusual photographs grace this monthly wall calendar, selected from the work of Canada's leading nature and wildlife photographers. All are suitable for framing.

The text and photo captions were prepared by the well known nature photographer and writer John Foster, who, together with his wife Janet, has travelled extensively while preparing the highly acclaimed CBC TV series To The Wild Country. Nature 75 features a striking full-color two-piece gift box for presentation and is available at all good bookstores at $3.95.

Hunting Dogs in Full Color

A beautiful new wall poster in full color entitled Know Your Hunting Dogs can now be obtained from the Remington Sportsmen's Library.

This is the latest addition to a decorative and educational series produced by Remington on subjects related to North American hunting. Previous subjects included ducks, upland game and North American big game.

The new poster contains 17 portraits of America's most popular hunting dogs, painted by well-known outdoor artist Bob Kuhn, and taken from scenes in the Remington Sportsmen's Library of Fine Prints.

Individual breeds portrayed include Brittany, Cocker and Springer Spaniels; Golden, Labrador and Chesapeake Bay Retrievers; English and Irish Setters; English and German Short-haired Pointers; the Weimaraner; and Basset, Beagle, Bluetick, Black and Tan, Redbone and Walker Hounds.

Each is reproduced in the faithful detail of high quality five-color printing. Beneath each dog is an identifying caption and a short descriptive paragraph.

Comparable in size and format to its predecessors, the poster measures a generous 23 by 29 inches and is made of heavy, specially laminated stock.

Whiles it may be used as is, the excellent quality of the poster's art and printing merit permanent framing as an attractive addition to sportsmen's game rooms and dens or to hunting and shooting club headquarters.

Its large size also makes it a useful educational aid for those teaching courses on the outdoors.

Know Your Hunting Dogs posters can be obtained by sending a check for $3 made out to Remington Sportsmen's Library to Dog Poster, Box 432, Bridgeport, Connecticut 06601. Previous posters can also be ordered at the same price by indicating preference for Duck Poster, Big Game Poster or Upland Bird Poster.

Eskimo Stories Are Rich and Varied

With the passage of the Native Claims Settlement Act and planning for the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, Alaska's native people have catapulted into the awareness of Americans everywhere.

Along with renewed interest among the natives themselves in preserving their traditional cultures has come an increasing desire among outsiders to know more about the people who live in this northermost region of the United States — the first native peoples to have gained tangible acknowledgement of their aboriginal claim to land within the United States.

A new book published by Alaska Northwest Publishing Company introduces the rich folk culture of one group of Alaska's Natives — the Eskimos of Seward Peninsula on Alaska's northwest coast.

ALASKAN IGLOO TALES is a collection of 35 age-old stories passed on for generations by tribal historians anl storytellers.

Northwest historian and writer Edward Keithahn gathered the stories when he and his wife Toni went to the village of Shishmaref to teach school and help open a cooperative store for the Eskimos of the area, and to give them even greater impact they are strikingly illustrated with 36 full-page drawings by George Ahgupuk, a young student of the Keithahns who has since become one of the most successful Eskimo artists of our time.

The stories in ALASKAN IGLOO TALES share the universal themes and rich inventiveness common to many oral folk literatures. Yet they are unique, reflecting the special qualities of a people who have managed to survive for centuries in one of the world's harshest and most inhospitable environments.

Some of them, like the whimsical "The tree that became a man," seem to be designed primarily to entertain; some attempt to explain the origins of the Eskimo people or animals in their environment; some, like A tale of two old women and When the dead man danced, are moral fables designed to teach a particular concept. Together, they paint a detailed picture of a remarkable Arctic people, and they offer outsiders real insight into one of America's least-known native cultures.

ALASKAN IGLOO TALES is available at bookstores, or for $4.95 plus 50 cents postage and handling from Alaska Northwest Publishing Company, Box 4-EEE, Anchorage, Alaska 99509.

IN BRIEF

One of the season's best mysteries to come my way is DEATH ON THE HOUR (McClelland and Stewart Ltd.; $7.95, 228 pages).

And no wonder. It is written by Richard Lockridge, who has at least 78 popular detective works to his credit.

Creator of the well-known Mr. and Mrs. North series of several years ago, Lockridge this time delves into television and the tricky world of communications and the fine machinations of greedy conglomerates.

To say more would be to spoil a fine evening's reading. TED BURGOYNE.

BLAZE ORANGE MAKES SENSE

Since most birds and animals are partly or totally color blind, it doesn't make much difference to them whether you wear camouflaged hunting clothes or ones of brilliant color. According to Remington Arms Company, Inc., from the standpoint of safety, it can make a vast amount of difference to you, however. All too many accidents have occurred because one hunter has mistaken another for an animal.

For this reason many game authorities now require upland game and deer hunters to wear blaze orange caps or vests or both. Extensive tests have shown this color to be highly visible even when the wearer is partially concealed by fall foliage, and it doesn't spook most game species.

There are exceptions, of course. Waterfowl hunters should still stick to khaki or camouflaged colors since ducks and geese would spot a blaze garment from far away and never come near a person wearing such clothes.

say, "this month we shall reach Hawaii." Our spirits lifted as a result.

Before sunrise on May 9, our 38th day out from Panama, we sighted Cape Kumakahi light. Gradually as we neared Hawaii the clouds dispersed and the island grew and colored. At last the tip of Mauna Kea appeared, showing a small patch of snow, our first snow for over four years.

We could see cane fields on the lower slopes alongside deep red patches of fallow earth. Higher the slopes grew dark with forest and higher still we could see a clear treeline where the forest stopped abruptly and scrub took over. Between the scrub and the snow lay barren, brown land.

Hawaii was beautiful, we were immensely grateful to have arrived at last.

CANADA STATISTICS

Canada 1974, the annual Statistics Canada handbook reviewing the nation's social and economic progress, is now available.

More than 140,000 copies have been printed; the book has been a perennial best-seller since the first issue in 1930. Fifty thousand copies have been ordered by the external affairs department for distribution abroad.

The 346-page report on the nation's affairs includes special articles on economics, history, environment, religion and geography written by experts in their fields.

Editor Constance McFarland works year-round assembling the material for the book which is published in separate French and English editions. Many of the country's leading photographers have contributed to the 250 photos in the book; 150 are in color.

Canada 1974, priced at $2.50, is available at Information Canada and other bookstores across the country, and by mail from Information Canada, Ottawa.

CANADA'S WILDERNESS IN STORY AND PICTURE

The awesome mystery and passion of the Canadian North fascinated the young painter, Frank E. Schoonover, and remained with him to the end of his active career.

The Edge Of The Wilderness, A portrait of the Canadian north, by Frank E. Schoonover, edited by Cortlandt Schoonover; Methven; 176 pages; $20 until Dec. 31.

His day book records, stories, paintings and photographs, which have been collected in The Edge of Wilderness, portray the spirit of the Canadian wilderness and its native people with truth and virility.

The continuous struggle with the elements, the pride and integrity of the people who called the North their home, the stark physical beauty of the wilderness can all be found in this unique visual and literary documentation.

Frank E. Schoonover made several extended visits to Northern Canada in the early twentieth century. The day books which he kept throughout his travels were a vibrant scource for his later writings which were published in major magazines such as Scribner's and Harper's. His paintings are in the permanent collections of the Glenbow-Alberta Institute, Calgary; Brandywine Museum, Pennsylvania; and the Delaware Museum, Wilmington.

Socialism Would Mean Disaster . . .

United States and the Mother Country, giving the latter the right to convey her troops across the contient at any time, and this, he seems to think, effectually disposes of the only serious objection that exists to annexation.

"The Senator simply advertises his ignorance of Canadian sentiment, and of British sentiment, also, for that matter, but we are not particularly concerned with the latter just now.

"There can be no annexation without the consent of the people of Canada, and they have no desire, they have not the remotest wish to form a part of the United States.

"A silly notion prevails in the United States that Canadians are so impressed with the progress of that country and become so enamored with its institutions that we would sever British connections at short notice, if our Mother Country would only express her willingness.

"There never was a greater mistake.

"Canadians admire the wonderful progress of the United States, but see in it something which they may repeat in their own territory and keep British.

"Canadians admire the efforts which their neighbors are making to work out the problems of popular government, but they are conscious of the fact that they themselves have institutions better calculated to preserve the rights and liberties of the people than those founded upon the American constitution.

"We Canadians hope to be able to avoid in Canada some of the stumbling blocks in the way of progress in the Great Republic, stumbling blocks largely of a social and economic character, which all careful thinkers in that country realize to be of the most serious character.

"But it is not only a real affection for the Mother Country, or the failure to be attracted by the institutions of the United States which accounts for the non-existence of any annexation sentiment in Canada.

"Canadians feel within themselves the possibility of any independent national existence.

"In saying this we do not mean an existence separate from the Empire.

"In the British dominions great problems are being worked out, and one of them is the existence of independent nationalities within the Empire.

"This will be something new in statecraft; but the Empire as it exists is a novelty.

"Fifty years ago no one would have ventured to predict such a political entity as the British Empire of today.

"It is the result of a political evolution.

"We do not believe that the most far-seeing statesman can forecast what will be the relative status of the component parts of the Empire 25 years from now.

"The evolutionary process is quickening its movement.

"In this movement Canadians feel that they are taking a part and that they have not the least desire to give it up, and join their neighbors in working out the American experiment.

"Our American friends do not understand this, which is, perhaps, natural enough.

"There is no reason why they should understand it.

"If they did they would see that there is something in being a Canadian that they have not hitherto suspected; they would realize why it is that there is not only no annexation sentiment in Canada, but no room for any.

"A man is usually content with what he has, and strives to build up a home of his own, with all its far-reaching possibilities.

"If his neighbor says 'I have a nice wife and family,' he may be ready to admit the proposition, but that does not make him any less contented when he goes home to his own.

"That is about the way it is with Canada, and it will always be that way; this Americans should understand."

WELLS PASS, OFF WATSON ISLAND. 2½ years later when George could handle a boat well.

TRAPPED — By Dede Clarke

Occasionally something happens that leaves a jagged edge on memory and there will be a sharp reminder of life's uncertainty. This particular mishap occurred almost 50 years ago, but remains a vivid recollection.

British Columbia's coastline is indented by hundreds of channels and is often likened to the innumerable fjords of Norway.

It is rugged territory, a great deal yet unknown except to the hardy loggers and fishermen. Airplane pilots must have a spectacular view from aloft.

Hand-logging ceased years ago as available stands of timber close to shore were gradually cleared by the loggers who made a precarious living in this fashion.

Big cedars had to be felled near water as there was no machinery to work with, so there was much searching for possible stands of timber which could be easily logged off. "Easily," only insofar as getting the trees into the water was concerned. It was hard, difficult work by any standard.

My husband heard of such a stand in Nepah Lagoon, on the mainland shore opposite the northern tip of Vancouver Island. We were living in a floathouse in Wells Pass at the time, and he said he would take the dinghy, go with the tide to the end of Kenneth Pass, and so into the lagoon.

If you were to draw a line due east from Alert Bay on Cormorant Island, to the mainland, it would come close to Wells Pass. Kenneth Passage is an offshoot of Wells.

It was a clear bright day when my husband rowed off in the small dinghy, a large man for so small a craft. I said I would take the gasboat and meet him later at the entrance to the lagoon to save him the long arduous row back home.

Our floathouse was secure behind its own boom just off Watson Island. Only once had I made this particular trip, but I knew that to get into the lagoon, one had to go through the Roaring Hole. This was something like a long, narrow, rocky street which connected the waterways. It was so named because of the noise made by the water as it tumbled in and out as tides rose and fell.

When I made the trip then, it was in a 40-foot cabin gasboat with a powerful engine and I had been below with the baby when we made the passage through the Hole. Going up on deck later, we were well inside the calm waters of the lovely, almost hidden, then little known lagoon.

It was roughly like a broad-thumbed mitten, the thumb part being perhaps something like a mile in width and length, and the finger part proportionately larger.

As elsewhere along the inland coastline, the water was deep even close inshore, and always cold. There were no settlements or camps. One might be inside and lost and no one would ever know.

To understand the Roaring Hole (Islander, Aug. 11, Cruising North, by Bill Heybroek), it was necessary to know the tides, and to remember them. It was possible to go through this passage when sufficient water had poured into, or out of, the lagoon, to make levels inside and outside the same. This could vary from possibly five to 10 minutes, according to the rise and fall of tides, a seasonal thing.

A small boat might have only two or three minutes leeway, but one with a good engine, could pass through after the tide had begun to flow strongly, but even so, only within a limited time also.

We had an 18-foot boat with an inboard 11½-horsepower motor, which meant we could travel an average speed of about four miles an hour, a bit more if favored by tide and not against the current. To get into water with these opposing forces was courting disaster, with a small boat.

The engine was in the centre. A small hatch at the bow extended about two feet, and there was a seat at the stern where one controlled the rudder.

My little son was about nine months old. I dressed him warmly and put him in his swan rocker. These seats for children were well known, the sides being carved to resemble various things. I passed a long scarf around his body and the back of the rocker, tieing him in so that he could not fall. He was between the engine and the bow of the boat and I sat at the stern to operate the rudder. He loved these rides and had no fear at all.

It was my intention to wait at the entrance of the Roaring Hole, tie up there, and wait. When the waters inside and outside were level, he could easily come through, and we would have the ebb tide to help us on the return journey down Kenneth Pass.

It was not possible to see the entire length of the narrow passage, but the most extensive view was from one particular spot and it was this to which I made my way. The water was pouring into the lagoon so I knew there would be a considerable wait. However, I could watch for the little red dinghy.

When within about three feet of the shoreline, I turned off the engine so that the boat's impetus could carry us safely to the overhanging branches where I could secure the rope.

That was my almost fatal mistake, for immediately the power was off, the boat was grabbed by the powerful current and swung into the Roaring Hole.

That was the end for us. Of that I was sure. I remember wondering if by any chance pieces of the boat would be discovered, so that it would be known what had happened to us. Submerged rocks would quickly tear all the boat's planking loose.

Also, I knew the only possible chance we had was to keep the rudder straight and pray it would not break under the pounding of the waters, or hit a rock.

In a matter of seconds we were drenched by the madly tumbling waters, knocking my little son over, and soaking the engine.

Then I saw a stretch of quiet water in a small curve of the shoreline and made for that. It was a backwater and we were imprisoned as securely as if the boat was anchored to the bottom. But it was safe.

As soon as I could tie the boat to the outspreading branches, I got the baby upright, but had to leave him in his rocker, crying, frightened, and soaking wet, while I bailed out the half-filled boat.

There was nothing I could do except try to comfort the child, holding him in my arms, and watch the boiling torrents of water and the innumerable whirlpools only a few feet away.

When the flow had subsided somewhat I tried to row along the shoreline, but could manage only a very short distance when it was necessary to rest and also to reassure the baby, now back in his rocker. The moment I stopped rowing the boat was swept back again by the powerful current.

It was an agonizing wait for there was nothing I could do until the water inside the lagoon and in the Pass became level and in the few moments that would be calm before the process was reversed, I knew my husband would come through.

At long last we sighted the dinghy and I'm sure the baby shouted as loud as I did. It was a deep shock to my husband to see us where we were — half way into this dreaded passage.

Quickly he came, tied the dinghy astern, and rowed us out. The engine was useless for the time being and so, it was a long hard pull all the way down Kenneth Pass. Fortunately, we had the now outgoing tide to help.

No one was hurt physically. The baby was dyed blue from the wet wool sweater he was wearing, and as for me, it was many months before I could sleep without nightmares about being caught in the whirlpools I'd been compelled to watch for a small eternity.

The baby?

Not much lost—except homes

End of the end of the line

A sign over the entrance at 550 Johnson says, "Eastern Hotel."

Long past its prime, the building hasn't seen any real hotel guests for decades.

It's been home to people living in the shadow of affluence — winos, burnt-out people who have reached the end of the line.

Ten of them still live there and by next Thursday, they have to leave.

The Eastern is one of several buildings scheduled for gutting and renovation.

In all, 10 brick tenements backing on the courtyard behind the Government Street liquor store will be restored by Victoria alderman and developer Sam Bawlf.

The courtyard will be turned into a European-style produce market and shopping square. The buildings will be remodelled to accommodate shops. The upper floors will be used for residential purposes.

By most standards, not much will be lost when the Eastern Hotel is finally closed, but to those still trying to find other places to live, the dingy rooms are all they have got.

"I guess next Thursday it's the streets for me," says Nelson Hiebert.

"I've been killing cockroaches all morning," he adds. There are hundreds of red spots on the floor.

Hiebert is 55 and on welfare.

"I've tried to get a place. I've tried everything"

He's only lived in the Eastern for three months, but they have been frightening months.

"I was robbed four times, and once I was beaten up. They just kicked my door in and started taking my things.

"I picked up a bottle and let one of them have it, but there was four of them and they beat the hell out of me," says Hiebert.

Most of the doors already have padlocks on them. The hallways are filthy. A stench of urine permeates the building.

Louis West, 59, is one of the luckier ones. He found a room at another hotel.

"My friend Einar fixed me up with a room at the Drake," says West.

Einar turns out to be the manager of the entire complex that is to be remodelled. His name is Einar Norgaard and he has been managing "the block" for 21 years.

"You got a strong stomach?" he asks.

He opens the door to one of the rooms and the sight is incredible.

Filth everywhere. An unmade bed with sheets that look grey. Bottles strewn on the floor. Windows dirty. Frying pans with half-rotten food on a hotplate.

"The guy died last week," says Norgaard. "Suicide, I think." Norgaard adds that he has seen more violence in the past 21 years than he cares to remember.

"I never walk through here (the hotel) unarmed at night," he says.

Two old men sit on a bench in the hallway. "Eh, I have a cheque for you," Norgaard says to one of them.

It's the provincial Mincome supplement payment.

He points to another room.

"This guy keeps his room spotless," he says.

The room is clean, but an old bedstead, a table and a chair are the only furnishings. The room has no window and the only light comes from a dusty bulb hanging on a wire from the ceiling.

Norgaard says it was im-

German scientist:

Birds suspected to be lung cancer carriers

FLORENCE, Italy — Migratory birds may be carriers of lung cancer, says a German scientist.

Dr. Nicholas Kraus of the Institute of Hygiene at the University of Dusseldorf, reported in a paper presented at the 11th International Cancer Congress here that the highest lung cancer mortality rate was observed in northern European countries.

A study showed that Finland had more cases than Sweden, and Scotland more cases then the rest of Britain, he said.

"Further investigations showed that the majority of cases in rural regions appear in the extreme north of Norway and in the region of the great lakes in Finland."

A study of all related factors from tumor-producing substances, smoking, infectious factors to nutrition, personal habits and radiation did not seem to influence the high rate of lung cancer, the paper said.

Dr. Kraus said because the virus theory as a cause of cancer is "more and more accepted by a growing number of scientists" and because migratory birds are known carriers of virus infections, an analysis was made.

"Our investigations disclosed surprising results: the greatest density of lung cancer was found exactly in those regions where certain species of birds end their migration," he said.

"It seems that only this biological phenomenon could explain the strange distribution of lung cancer in neighboring states of Northern Europe."

U.S. scientists reported evidence that a virus may cause breast cancer in women.

Support for the virus theory came from the isolation last year of a suspected virus by researchers at the Michigan Cancer Foundation.

The foundation announced four months ago that extensive testing would begin to determine if the virus was a "true human breast cancer virus."

If tests proved positive, researchers said, it would open the way for a major research effort to cure or prevent the disease.

Dr. Michael Brennan, president of the Michigan foundation, said that expected confirmations of the virus research may spur international activity toward testing of a vaccine within two years.

Breast cancer is the largest killer of women aged 35 to 55 in the United States. Of about 350,000 cancer victims reported in 1972, about 32,000 died of breast cancer.

Recent breast cancer operations on both First Lady Bett Ford and Nelson Rockefeller's wife, Happy, have spurred a surge in checkups by women around the world.

Evidence that breast cancer has increased among women in industrialized countries, including a paper by a Regina researcher, has led to sharp

Smallwood rejected in new leadership bid

ST. JOHN'S Nfld. (UPI) — Former premier Joseph Smallwood was denied a second chance Saturday when incumbent Edward Roberts was re-elected leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland.

The leadership convention was delayed for 15 minutes when police cleared the 800 delegates from the centre because of a telephoned bomb threat. No device was found by police.

Roberts, 34, was re-elected leader on the second ballot with 403 votes to 298 for Smallwood. Two other candidates dropped out after the first ballot when Roberts got 337 votes and Smallwood 305.

Stephen Neary was eliminated from the running when he received only 24 votes on the first ballot. Rogers Simmons got 57 votes and he withdrew of his own volition.

Roberts succeeded Smallwood as party leader on Feb. 5, 1972, when Smallwood stepped down after 23 years as Liberal chief. Smallwood, 73, brought Newfoundland into Confederation in 1949 and governed the province until his retirement from politics two years ago.

Smallwood
. . . 'school boy'

Smallwood announced only last month he was ending his retirement and re-entering provincial politics.

He said after his defeat in the leadership race Saturday that he will continue to help the party. He said his defeat by Roberts was "not one of humiliation."

"I feel like I did when I resigned from politics two years ago," he said. "I said then that I felt like a schoolboy let out of school."

Conservative Premier Frank Moores said he had thought Roberts would win with stronger support. "I thought he was going to win more decisively than he did," Moores said. "I thought it was a very indecisive victory."

Hostages still held

THE HAGUE (UPI) — Two Arabs and two Dutch convicts are holding at least 22 hostages including several women and children seized Saturday during a Catholic mass in the chapel of Scheveningen prison.

Police said one of the convicts was a Palestinian serving five years for burning a British jet at Amsterdam's airport March 3.

Instant lawsuits if rents go up

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Tenants Organization will take landlords to court if they issue notices for rent increases that exceed the B.C. government's 8-per-cent ceiling on increases, organization president Bruce Yorke said Saturday.

The Rental Housing Council of B.C., representing 1,600 landlords, said Friday it had discovered a technicality which would permit rent increases averaging 20 per cent in January.

Council chairman Bruce Innes said council lawyers say the 8-per-cent rent ceiling, in the Residential Interim Rent Stabilization Act, instituted in May, expired Oct. 1, when the new Landlord and Tenant Act was proclaimed.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said the ceiling still applied.

Yorke said the tenant organization would ask the attorney-general to see to it that prosecution of landlords who exceed the 8-per-cent ceiling "proceeds with the greatest possible dispatch."

"The landlords' lawlessness must be dealt with resolutely by the government," Yorke said. "It is more imperative than ever that the provisions of the Interim Rent Stabilization Act remain in force and under no circumstances be altered at this session of the legislature."

possible to keep the building clean.

"They would mess it up in every conceivable way," he says, adding that it wasn't uncommon for some of the tenants to relieve themselves in the hallways or vomit on the floors after some heavy drinking.

Norgaard stresses that "the other side" was different. The buildings on the Pandora side of the tenement block, he says, had housed almost exclusively Chinese people.

Most of them have already found other quarters, he says, but then he knocks at one of the doors.

The suite has two occupants, an old Chinese couple.

Mrs. Nui Oy Ho is 68 years old. She has lived in downtown Victoria most of her life, the last nine years at the present suite.

"I like it here, but I have to leave," she says in broken English.

Perhaps she will move in with one of her daughters. It's kind of difficult right now to make any decisions, she says, because her husband is in hospital.

The suite looks old-fashioned, but everything is spotless. "In two months I must move," she says. Residents of the Johnson Street suites have until the end of the year to find other homes.

Bawlf says he's trying everything to help relocate the people. He says he's checking every week on how many have been unable to find other accommodation.

Bawlf gave some of the residents of the Eastern and Senator Hotels, which is also included in the complex, a month's free rent to ease the transition.

Big 'score' in Chicago still mystery

CHICAGO (UPI) — Seven weeks ago, the tip filtered out of the underworld that there would be "a big weekend score" in Chicago.

That was an understatement.

And, although state, county and federal law enforcement agencies knew of the tip and posted stakeouts, nobody told the Chicago police who might have been able to head off the heist of the century.

The "score" was the looting of an Armored Express Co. vault last weekend of an estimated $4.3 million in $10, $20, $50 and $100 bills.

It was the greatest criminal score, in terms of folding money lifted, in U.S. history. In world terms of criminal endeavor, it is topped only by the $7.6 million great British train robbery of 1962.

In bulk terms, the burglars hauled away about 800 pounds in bills, probably in paper shopping bags.

No one on record is sure as to just when the boodle was lifted. But it must have been between 9:26 p.m. Oct. 19, when two Armored Express employees locked the vault after stashing a $1.3 million shipment from Hawthorne race track, and 1:10 a.m. Monday, when gasoline-filled bags left in the vault by the thieves caught fire, apparently ignited by time fuses.

Rewards totalling $265,000 have been offered for the return of the money and the capture of its thieves by Puraltor Security Inc., parent firm of Armored Express, and Commercial Insurance Co., which is stuck for most of the insurance on the cash.

Police across the country are looking for it, of course. So, it is believed by police, are members of the crime syndicate who may not have been in on the super-burglary but who hate to think of that much loose cash lying around.

One man — the inside man, authorities say — has been charged, but police don't have him. He was gone from his suburban Berwyn home when agents went to get him Friday.

Two more, including a self-styled "career crook ... master criminal," have been questioned and released, although police said they are still keeping an eye on them — as some law agencies were after the tip of the "big score."

A fourth man, described as a wizard with burglar alarms who has crime syndicate connections, hasn't been found.

For all the snafus, police could not help but admire what they called a "superbly planned" job.

This is how they think it happened:

There were probaby two dry runs at the heist, since there had been that many false burglary reports from the building.

Someone from the inside let the burglars in.

An electronics expert on the team of thieves took care of the alarm on the vault door, even though no wires were found to be cut.

Then the gang — from four to six men, police believe, using a walkie-talkie to keep in touch with their lookout — hauled the money away, hauled the gasoline bags inside, and, it appears, left the vault door open a crack in the knowledge that lack of oxygen might quench a fire.

It all could have happened as much as 30 hours before the bags blazed, police believe.

Next Game: Monday — James Bay vs. Ingranam, Memorial Arena.

Undefeated Lake Cowichan Lakers poured 49 shots at goalkeeper Brian O'Neill on the way to a 6-0 triumph Saturday night over visiting Ingraham Buckaroos.

The win increased the Lakers' lead in the South Island Big Six Hockey League to six points over second-place Stockers North Americans.

In a game at Chemainus, Chemainus Blues downed winless James Bay Athletic Association Gulls, 8-4, to pull into a deadlock with Buckaroos.

Bob Riddell scored twice and Jim Peterson, Alvin White, Rod Hunter and Ray Bansely had one each for Lakers. John Lindsay in the winners nets made 24 saves for the shutout.

Dave Griff was the only Blues player to score two goals. Joe Piper, Pete Lemon, Don Smith, Vern Lambourne, Bob Wilson and Barry Wiebe were the other Chemainus scorers. Kelly Christiansen, with two goals, Cliff Weist and Perry Head got the James Bay goals.

controversy among delegates to the cancer congress.

Researchers from Israel and Finland also reported that population studies indicated breast cancer is on the rise. But others from the United States and Australia said breast cancer appeared stable.

The evidence presented at a symposium on trends in cancer incidence was questioned by several epidemiologists, researchers who determine the state of diseases in large populatiin groups.

The American and Australian scientists said there had been an apparent rise in recent years, but it was due to better detection through mass-screening prevention programs, not to an actual rise in cases.

Dr. T. H. Barclay of the Allan Blair Memorial Clinic in Regina had reported earlier that a study of breast cancer in 800 women showed there was a marked increase in incidence.

"In Saskatchewan, the crude incidence rate for cancer of the female breast almost doubled in the 25-year period 1946 to 1970," he said.

Your good health

By G. C. THOSTESON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Writing about itching, you told about a steroid, or cortisone-type ointment to stop it. I went to our drug store to ask for it and he won't give it to me without our doctor's prescription. Please tell me why. — Mrs. J. K.

Because he's a law-abiding pharmacist.

Cortisone in its various forms is a powerful medication, and can be harmful unless used under the supervision of a physician who knows how much to use, and knows what warning signs to watch for, in case the patient is getting too much.

There's a secondary reason, too. A prescription indicates that a physician has diagnosed the patient's condition and is in a position to decide what medication is the right one.

Steroid ointment can be useful in controlling some types of itching but would be totally useless for other kinds of itches. Used for the wrong kind of itch, it would be a waste of money, would do no good, might be harmful — and in any event you'd still have the itch.

College books six concerts

NANAIMO — Six major concerts have been booked for the winter season by Malaspina College music instructor Tom Petrowitz.

The concerts will be staged in Nanaimo's St. Andrew's United Church and a new ticket system has been devised which will allow both individuals and family groups of up to five people to attend the series at a reduction over the cost of separate tickets for each of the six performances. Reduced prices will also be offered for students and old-age pensioners.

First concert will be Thursday and will feature the Charlie Byrd Trio, one of the finest jazz groups in North America.

This will be followed Nov. 20 by the Victoria-based piano-duo Robin Wood and Winnifred Scott. French-Canadian pantomime artist Claude St. Denis will provide a complete change of pace Jan. 31.

The Classical Brass Quintet will be featured Feb. 19 and, on March 1, it will be the turn of flutist Paul Horn. Final concert in the series will be given on March 25 by guitarist Gene Bertoncini.

Singers present concert

NANAIMO — Victoria's Amity Singers, Vancouver Island's only professional choir, is in Nanaimo today, to present a concert in St. Andrew's United Church at 2 p.m., under the auspices of the arts and lectures and the music departments of Malaspina College.

Directed by Timothy Vernon, the choir was formed 14 years ago and was originally known as the Victoria College Chorale. This later evolved into the Varsity Singers as many of its singers, who had left Victoria College, wished to keep the group together.

The present name, Amity Singers, was adopted 10 years ago, and since then the choir has toured many Vancouver Island communities, on occasion with the Victoria Symphony Orchestra.

The group has also sung in Vancouver and been featured several times on CBC radio, first as winners of the CBC choir award in the Victoria Music Festival and later by invitation of the network.

Timothy Vernon, the choir's new musical director, studied in Vancouver and Victoria before moving to the State Music Academy in Vienna, where he was an outstanding pupil of Hans Swarowsky. Graduating with high honors, Vernon then studied opera conducting in Italy and has since conducted orchestras in Austria, Italy, Bulgaria, France, Holland and U.S.A.

Adamson checks seedless English cucumbers

Bigger and better

Produce grown without soil

By GRANIA LITWIN
Colonist Reporter

Thousands of people across Vancouver Island grow tomatoes in their back gardens.

And hundreds of them annually contact the Federal Research Station, 8801 East Saanich, to find why tomatoes in window-boxes, back garden plots and small greenhouses have shrunk in size year by year or grown bumps.

For 12 years, the experimental farm has studied tomato-growing, partly to aid the home gardener and partly to help greenhouse owners on the island.

The study has found, for example, that greenhouse soil becomes "tired and dirty," and that many processes for keeping plants in top form are both laborious and expensive.

The 12-year study has been an experiment in the soil-less culture of commercial greenhouse tomatoes, trickle watering and liquid feeding systems — in other words, growing tomatoes in sawdust rather than soil and feeding tomatoes almost intravenously through rubber tubes lodged above their root systems.

Tubes drip controlled doses of nitrogen, calcium, magnesium, iron, copper and water on the roots along with other elements from a complete nutrient solution in a central greenhouse container.

Robert Adamson, research scientist at the station, who has been working on the study since it began, found that tomato plants grown this way show a dramatic increase in production.

The amount of sawdust needed to grow a tomato plant is much less than the soil required for the same plant because all the nutrients and minerals are added in liquid form. This means less work in caring for the plant. And it can be fed more exactly since doses of nutrients can be increased at crucial times when the plant bears fruit or produces flowers.

Adamson is conducting similar experiments with seedless "English" cucumbers. These cucumbers, he said, will probably replace shorter cucumbers which have seeds and are most common in the area.

He is also experimenting with smaller amounts of sawdust in the plastic bag at the plant's roots to reduce the cost. Along with this, a chemical called ethephen is being tested which accelerates maturing.

Minister, council representatives meet

Second river crossing possible in two years

By BILL SMITH
Colonist Correspondent

COURTENAY—A second crossing of the Courtenay River, the long-awaited bypass route and several other important traffic issues were discussed last week at a two-hour meeting between Highways Minister Graham Lea, representatives of Courtenay, Comox and Cumberland councils and of the Comox-Strathcona Regional Board.

The second bridge will likely be constructed at 17th Street within two or three years.

Highways department planning officer Bert Wilkins told council a problem had arisen over location of the bridge because the federal department of transport requires a 60-foot clearance for the structure.

Plans drafted by the highways department allowed for a 25-foot clearance.

One option that council will discuss immediately with Comox MP Hugh Anderson and local fishermen is a suggestion that tall-masted fishing boats moored at the federal government wharf at the slough be relocated at the civic marina, and small craft from the marina be moved to the slough.

Wilkins said options for the proposed site were narrowing and meetings will be held soon with the land commission to discuss the amount of agricultural land needed for the bridge construction and approaches.

He said the type of bridge which might be built would have a 15-foot clearance and would affect about only nine acres of farmland.

Courtenay Mayor William Moore stressed the need for immediate action. He said traffic tieups are becoming commonplace over the narrow Fifth Street bridge.

He also said a shopping centre on Ryan Road now appears assured, and when the new pool-arena complex opens next month, the traffic situation will be further aggravated.

Wilkins said the new four-lane bridge would cost about $2 million. He said a package deal will be presented to consultants as soon as possible, so that a start can be made on the design of the structure.

Moncrief
. . . clear obstacles

He told the group that land in the area is being acquired. However, he ruled out any possibility of a bypass being developed in the immediate future.

Wilkins stressed that such a plan depended on a community plan and his department would work with the regional board planner in developing such a route.

However, Moore argued that the provincial government should give the planner some idea where it wants to locate the bypass route.

Cumberland Mayor William Moncrief, stressing the need for early action on construction of a second crossing, said he wanted local councils and the highways department to exert pressure on the department of transport to clear any obstacles that might now be in the way of progress.

Passing lanes on the Island Highway between Campbell River and Parksville will become a reality, but not before the southern portion of the highway is completed.

City council, in a brief presented to the minister, said that from Parksville to Campbell River, a distance of 75 miles, there is only one passing lane — at Mission Hill, just outside Courtenay.

The minister told Moore he was unable to set a precedent by providing funds for upgrading the back road between Courtenay and Comox.

He was told council thinks there is a long-standing moral obligation on the part of the department to rehabilitate the entire portion of the road, and that the former government made a verbal agreement in 1968 that the back road would be "looked after" if the city would bring a portion of the road into the city boundaries.

Lea promised he would have the mater referred to the highways board, but held out little hope that a precedent would be set.

CLC rescinds boycott on Goodyear products

The Canadian Labor Congress' call for a nationwide boycott of Goodyear tires and rubber products has been rescinded, a spokesman for the International Association of Machinists, Local 219, said Saturday.

The strike at the company's plants at Etobicoke and Bowmanville, Ont., ended Wednesday, Hugh Weydert, business agent for the local, said.

Weydert said the settlement of the six-month strikes automatically cancelled the CLC call for a boycott of the company's products and retail outlets.

The CLC executive committee had called for the boycott at its monthly meeting in September, asking the 1.9 million trade unionists affiliated with the congress to "refrain from buying Firestone and Goodyear products and to stay away from retail outlets operated by these companies."

Workers at the Firestone plant in Hamilton, Ont., have been on strike since Feb. 28.

In Victoria, Firestone operates a retail outlet store at 2882 Douglas and a wholesale store at 833 Fisgard.

The CLC-sponsored boycott of those stores is still in effect.

Earlier reports that Victoria Tire Ltd., 610 Herald, was a Goodyear retail store were erroneous, Weydert added Saturday.

He said while the company does sell Goodyear products, it is owned locally and has a "very good record in the labor relations field."

Engineers give awards to 2 men

Two Esquimalt men were winners of awards at the annual conference of the Association of Professional Engineers of British Columbia Friday in The Empress.

Winner of the R. A. McLachlan award was Esquimalt Ald. Terry Prentice. Winner of the Association Gold Medal award was Andrew Dunwoody, also of Esquimalt.

The McLachlan award is made to an engineer who, through his activity in professional affairs and community activities, has exhibited to a notable degree a concern with public welfare.

Prentice, in addition to being an alderman, is a director of the Community Council of Greater Victoria, a member of the Greater Victoria Intermunicipal committee and is involved in other community services.

The Gold Medal award is given to a recent engineering graduate of the University of British Columbia who maintained the highest academic standing over all his university years. Dunwoody is a 1974 UBC graduate.

Malaspina sets course on edible mushrooms

NANAIMO — This is the time of year when the fields and forests of Vancouver Island provide an annual harvest of mushrooms that come in every size, shape and color, some of them an epicure's delight, others poisonous to the point of being lethal.

With this in mind Malaspina College will be offering a short course, entitled Know the Vancouver Island Mushrooms, on Nov. 2 and 9.

The course, which will combine a lecture and a field trip on each of the two days, is intended for people who are interested in collecting edible types of mushrooms.

The lecturer will be Dr. Adam Szczawinski of the B.C. Provincial Museum in Victoria, who is recognized throughout North America as one of the leading authorities on the subject.

Every year at this time he is deluged with requests from amateur collectors seeking information about edible mushrooms, and Szczawinski is frequently asked by the medical profession to make correct identifications of mushrooms involved in poisoning cases.

Szczawinski is the co-author of a publication entitled Guide to Common Mushrooms of British Columbia. His lectures will include a demonstration of how to prepare the edible types for the table.

The class size will be limited to 24 persons. The registration fee is $5 for the two sessions. Further details can be obtained from botany instructor George MacKenzie-Grieve at Malaspina College.

Extend Trans-Canada on Island

MP plans highway bill

COURTENAY — Comox-Alberni MP Hugh Anderson said Friday he will introduce a private member's bill in the House of Commons calling for extension of the Trans-Canada Highway from Nanaimo to Port Hardy and from there to the west coast of Vancouver Island.

"There is nothing more important than good communications and transportation facilities to the social, economic and cultural well being of the upper Island," said Anderson.

Anderson said another important issue with ramifications that reach far outside Comox-Alberni and B.C., is the problem of women left to raise families alone, after being deserted, divorced or widowed.

Because the cost of day-care eats up their salaries, these women often end up leaving the work force to go on social assistance and this benefits no one, he said.

Anderson said he intends lobbying for a change in the income tax laws to help these women. He is proposing that any mother who is the sole supporter of her children, and who makes less than $12,000 a year, be exempted from paying income tax on her earnings.

This would help keep their valuable skills in the labor force, cut down on welfare costs and, most important, give help to people who need it the most, Anderson said.

Arson brings jail, fine

COURTENAY — Daniel Parker, 39, of Courtenay, was jailed for one day, fined $1,000 and placed on probation for two years by Judge Anthony Sarich for wilfully setting fire to a home in Fourth Street in Courtenay.

Parker was also ordered to make restitution to the home owner and abstain from alcohol during the term of his probation.

The fine and the restitution are to be paid in two years. The fire caused several thousand dollars damage.

Harbors projects

COURTENAY—A total of 27 projects are being funded in the Comox-Alberni riding under Environment Canada's Small Crafts Harbors projects for 1974-75.

The allotment to Comox-Alberni this year is $1,056,000 out of a total budget for the province of $6,000,000.

The Port Alberni, Tofino, Bamfield and Ucluelet areas will receive a major portion of the money, with the remainder going to Campbell River and other North Island areas.

School board eyes addition of trustee

QUALICUM BEACH—The Qualicum Beach district school board may increase the number of its trustees from five to six. The new trustee would represent the French Creek area.

New portable classrooms, slated for several district schools, should be ready for use next month.

Among the schools which will get the classrooms are the Parksville junior high and the elementary schools at Nanoose and Qualicum Beach.

This week 21 Qualicum Beach Grade 12 students will attend a three-day camp at Northwest Bay, where they will learn camping skills and wilderness survival techniques.

A community plan for the area covered by the Qualicum Beach school district has been drawn up by the Nanaimo Regional District.

Flyers and Black Hawks reach top of divisions

Philadelphia Flyers and Chicago Black Hawks earned a share of first place in their respective National Hockey League divisions Saturday but took different routes to victory.

The Stanley Cup champion Flyers, somewhat subdued after a penalty-filled clash with California Golden Seals on Friday, needed a goal from Jim Watson with only 65 seconds remaining to snatch a 3-2 win over Vancouver Canucks.

Chicago, meanwhile, had little difficulty with the sagging Toronto Maple Leafs, coasting to a 9-3 win at Maple Leaf Gardens.

In Vancouver, the Canucks jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first period but fell into a tie when reserve-centre Bill Clements fired his first two goals of the season, 58 seconds apart, midway through the second period.

Flyers came on strong in the final period but were stymied by the Vancouver defenders and goalkeeper Gary Smith, who was tested 25 times.

Watson's goal came following a faceoff in the Vancouver end, Bobby Clarke winning the draw and Reg Leach feeding the puck back to the blue line. Watson's 60-foot shot eluded Smith and the Flyers went on to their fifth win of the season.

The result moved Philadelphia into a deadlock with New York Islanders, who continued their blistering early-season pace with a 4-0 win over tthe visiting Minnesota North Stars Islanders, beaten only once this season, enjoy two games in hand on the Flyers.

In Toronto, veterans Stan Mikita and Dennis Hull fired two goals each as the Hawks broke the game open with six straight goals, three in the second period.

In the middle session, Mikita scored on a power play slightly more than a minute after the opening faceoff to put the Hawks up by 3-1 and the Toronto defences folded.

Chicago took complete control and skated rings around the Leafs, Hull and J.P. Bordeleau scoring before the period ended.

Toronto goalkeeper Dunc Wilson was replaced by Doug Favell in the third period but the Chicago onslaught continued, Favell being tagged for four more goals as Chicago ran up its highest goals total of the season.

The victory moved the Hawks into a first-place deadlock with the Canucks in the Smythe Division and Chicago has a game in hand.

At Uniondale, Clark Gillies scored his first NHL goal to give the Islanders the lead and Billy Smith went on to post his second shutout of the season - tops in the league.

Islanders, eighth in goals-allowed last season, have given up only 15 goals in seven games this campaign and have scored 30 times, a vast improvement from their league-low of 2.33 goals per game last season.

Islanders and Flyers have a two-point edge on Atlanta Flames and New York Rangers in the Patrick Division.

Rangers climbed into a share of third place with a 5-4 win over the Penguins in Pittsburgh. Steve Vickers broke a 4-4 tie with about two minutes to play with his second goal of the game.

LOU HARRIS of the B.C. Lions has had a season which ordinarily would make him an almost-automatic winner of the Schenley Award as the outstanding player in the Canadian Football League but he doesn't look any better than a 3-1 shot. He first has to beat out the amazing George Reed in the Western Conference, and then the next hurdle would be to get more votes than flashy Johnny Rodgers, who can be tabbed as certain to be voted the outstanding player in the Eastern Conference . . . going into last night's game, the eight leading scorers in the CFL didn't have a single touchdown between them . . . and if there is anyone still wondering about the ability of Don Moorhead, only Ron Lancaster (19) has thrown more touchdown passes in the CFL this season. Not only did Moorhead have 17 scoring throws after the Lions' first 16 games, but he also had fewer passes intercepted than any quarterback who had thrown 250 or more. His total was 13, Lancaster led with 20 . . . it had been quite a while since I last went fishing with Jack Seedhouse but a Friday trip off Oak Bay showed that he hadn't lost the touch. The bag was six salmon, and I thought I did well to wind up no worse than 2-4 . . . Jim Champion, who came to B.C. Lions from St. Louis Cardinals to serve as assistant and head coach, is regaining any stature he may have lost by leaving the National Football League. Back with the Cardinals as defence coach, he is enjoying the fruits of a 6-0 start for his club . . . best tickets for the Grey Cup game this year are priced at $17.50, and while that may be a bit much, they're a bargain compared to the $20 tops being charged in Vancouver for the heavyweight championship fight between George Foreman and Muhhamad Ali. That could turn out to be a damp joke . . . pre-season reports that Washington Capitals had sold out their arena and were to be an instant NHL success seem to have been somewhat exaggerated. The early crowds have been averaging less than 9,000, and it isn't likely the Capitals are going to do anything this season to encourage more fan support . . . and it will be interesting to see how Kansas City Scouts do when they finally get to play at home. Because of arena construction delays, they had to start the season with an eight-game road trip, and they're 0-6-1 with a game coming up in Boston tonight. The Scouts get home next Saturday against Chicago Black Hawks . . .

VICTORIA COUGARS are likely to be one if the most-scouted teams in junior hockey this season, and two of six or seven reasons are Victoria-youngsters Mel Bridgman and Rick LaPointe. There are already out-of-town speculations that both could go in the first two rounds of the NHL draft. And so could one or two teammates . . . Bridgman was the top producer on that gruelling 10-game road trip with 12 goals and 15 assists, but there was plenty of scoring help from Peter Morris (9-13), Jim Gustafson (10-8) and Danny Lucas, who was handicapped by sickness and missed some action but still provided 11 assists to go along with his goal . . . coach Marshall Johnston of California Golden Seals would win easily if there was an award for the most-fatuous hockey comment of the season. After the Seals, who won all of 13 games last season, had managed no better than a 4-4 tie with fledgling Kansas City Scouts, Johnston explained that it was tough to get his club up for an expansion team like that . . . the best high school football team in Michigan has a fellow name Rockey Rote as its tight-end and a tackle name Matt Morall. Yes, their dads were indeed those celebrated quarterbacks, Tobin Rote and Earl Morrall . . . any thoughtful sports fan will agree with the opinion that the Western Canada Hockey League should not allow defenceman Greg Neeld to play. He lost an eye last season while playing for Toronto Marlboros and the risk of an injury that could leave him blinded is too great. Besides, unless there is a change of policy, he won't be able to play in the NHL . . . Bob Nevin in his prime was one of the more under-rated players in the NHL, and one of the pleasant developments of this season is the standout play of the 36-year-old rightwinger. He's one of the big reasons Los Angeles Kings got away so well . . . World Team Tennis wasn't much of a success, and John Bassett unloaded Toronto Royals after the first season. The Royals split their home appearances between Toronto and Buffalo, averaging less than 2000 paid for their 11 Toronto matches and less than 3500 for the same number of matches in Buffalo. The operating loss was probably in excess of $500,000, yet the Royals were in the top three in attendance . . .

TORONTO ARGOS certainly made a great trade when they got tackle Granny Liggins from Calgary Stampeders in exchange for Leon McQuay, the reluctant running-back, but the Argos have more than made up for it this season. They sent running-back Pete Watson and linebacker Steve Smear to Saskatchewan Roughriders for Bill Baker, then wound up with Canadian linebacker George Anderson when they sent Baker to B.C. Lions. The Argos also sent George Wells, a better-than-average defence end, to Saskatchewan for quarterback Jim Lindsey, who was released some time ago. It adds up to Anderson for Smear, Wells and Watson . . . a Scottish Youth Team will compete at Crystal Pool on Nov. 26 against a team picked from the four area swimming clubs . . . if you don't think that the world is changing, the British women's open golf tournament is scheduled to be played on the Old Course at St. Andrews next year. And worse than that, Gorde, the ladies will not only have use of the clubhouse and locker rooms but they will also be allowed to enter the Big Room and the Silence Room . . . there has been one delay after another in the construction of the New Orleans Superdome, but the thing to wonder about is not the date of completion but who will be able to afford the rental. The latest estimate is that operating costs, including interest charges, will average $37,500 a day — and that's for every day of the year, rented or not . . . the B.C. Sports Hall of Fame, which is located in the B.C. Building on the PNE grounds in Vancouver, will provide no-cost tours between 9:15 a.m. and 4:45 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, and on Sundays between 1 and 4:45 p.m. Arrangements can be made by telephoning 253-2311 (local 238), but don't forget that's a Vancouver number . . . Danny Murtaugh, manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates, turned things around just a bit in a post-game interview after his club had lost the National League playoff to Los Angeles Dodgers. When he got no takers after asking if there were any questions, he said, "Any answers?"

Nordiques run streak to four

World Hockey Association play has been on for more than two weeks, but there are still two undefeated teams in the Canadian Division.

Quebec Nordiques remained one of the two clubs by defeating Phoenix Roadrunners, 4-1, Saturday before 8,879 fans at the Quebec Coliseum.

Rejean Houle started the Nordiques off with a goal at 1:22 of the first period. Rejean Cloutier added the second goal five minutes later and Francois Lacombe made it, 3-0, at 12:18 of the first period.

Cam Connor scored for Phoenix before the end of the first period, but Serge Bernier made it 4-1 with his fourth of the season, in the third period.

The victory was the fourth for the Nordiques and left them two points behind Toronto Toros, who are unbeaten in five starts and lead the Canadian Division.

In a game played before 3,471 fans at West Springfield, Massachussetts, New England Whalers extended their lead in the Eastern Division by dumping winless, Indianapolis Racers, 6-1.

PHOENIX (1) — Cam Connor. QUEBEC (4) — Serge Bernier, Rejean Houle, Francois Lacombe, Rejean Cloutier. Attendance: 8879.

INDIANAPOLIS (1) — Steve Andrascik. NEW ENGLAND (6) — Larry Pleau, Tim Sheehy, Terry Caffery, Rick Ley, Thommy Abrahmsson, Al Karlander. Attendance: 3471.

Saleski and one mate suspended after wild outbreak in Oakland

Don Saleski
. . . suspended

Two Philadelphia Flyers have been suspended as the result of Friday night's wild National Hockey League game in Oakland . . . but which two seems to be in doubt.

Don Saleski and Bob Kelly sat out Saturday night's game in Vancouver after Philadelphia officials received a wire advising of the immediate suspensions by league president Clarence Campbell.

But in Montreal, Brian O'Neill, executive director of the NHL, said that suspensions had been handed Saleski and Dave Schultz.

All three Flyers were among eight players given game misconduct penalties by referee Bryan Lewis after a bench-clearing episode in the game won by California Golden Seals, 4-1.

The game produced an NHL record 232 minutes in penalties, the major portion of which came after forward Orest Kindrachuk of the Flyers and defenceman Mike Christie of the Seals clashed in the third period.

In addition to Saleski, Schultz and Kelly, Kindrachuk and Andre Dupont of the Flyers and Christie, Len Frig and Jim Neilson of the Seals drew game misconducts.

Schultz and Christie had drawn majors after a first-period fight and Schultz received another major in the second period after tangling with John Stewart.

O'Neill said that the suspensions would remain in effect at least until a hearing is held by Campbell later this week.

Bob Kelly

Canadiens win, so do Kings

Montreal Canadiens have finally achieved a winning record.

They made it at home Saturday night by scoring two late goals to get by Detroit Red Wings, 4-2.

The result moved Canadiens within a point of the Wings, who hold down second place in the Norris Division, but the surprising Los Angeles Kings remained four points ahead of Canadiens by knocking off California Golden Seals, 5-1.

Meanwhile, Buffalo Sabres broke the four-way tie that existed in the Adams Division, blanking St. Louis Blues, 2-0, to take over first place.

The stubborn Wings twice caught Canadiens, but Guy Lafleur broke the 2-2 tie with a fine individual effort which brought him his first goal of the season. Less than three minutes later, Murray Wilson also came through with his first goal of the season to give Canadiens a more comfortable lead.

Lafleur also drew two assists, helping Bob Gainey to open the scoring and then feeding a pass on the goal scored by Yvan Lambert, who leads his club with seven goals.

Rick Dudley's first two goals of the season, one in the first period and the other in the second, were more than enough for rookie Gary Bromley of the Sabres, who scored his first NHL shutout.

Dudley's first goal was the 15th power-play goal scored against the Blues this season.

Bob Nevin (2), Bob Berry, Juha Widing and Gene Carr scored for the Kings. Stan Weir got the California goal.

Next games: Tonight — Regina at VICTORIA, Brandon at Lethbridge, Calgary at Saskatoon, Kamloops at New Westminster.

What a difference a year makes.

Last season at this time, Victoria Cougars were headed for their third straight fifth-place finish in the Western Division of the Western Canada Hockey League.

Today, they're leading that division, and can add to their points total tonight when Regina Pats visit Memorial Arena for a 7:30 p.m. game.

Cougars have recently finished the most successful road trip in their WCHL history, a 10-game jaunt which resulted in six wins and two ties for the Island club, including a 7-5 win over the defending Memorial Cup champions in Regina.

Cougars outscored their opponents 57-40 on the road trip and coach Pat Ginnell plans no lineup changes. But he may add defenceman Gordie Roberts providing he gets approval from league president Ed Chynoweth before game time.

Roberts, a 17-year-old rookie from Detroit, has been under suspension for the last three games pending a ruling by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association over a transfer problem.

The CAHA is meeting in Ottawa this weekend and the Roberts case is expected to be considered and a ruling made today.

Roberts played last season for Detroit Wings of the Southern Ontario Hockey League and was subsequently drafted by Sudbury Wolves of the Ontario Hockey Association. But, Roberts decided to play this season in the WCHL and the Wolves have filed a protest with the CAHA

If Roberts does not play, Ginnell will likely use Lori Gloeckner, who played extremely well in the latter stages of the road trip, in his place.

In Saturday action, the Pats upset the Bruins, 4-1, in New Westminster while Medicine Hat Tigers rolled to a 6-0 win over the visiting Brandon Wheat Kings.

REGINA (4) — Dave Faulkner, Rob Tudor 2, Jon Hammond; NEW WESTMINSTER (1) Kelly Secord. Attendance—1989.

BRANDON (0) — MEDICINE HAT (6) — Bryan Maxwell, Don Murdock, Greg Vaydik 3, Boychuk.

Canadians farm top draft pick

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League announced Saturday that they have sent centreman Doug Risebrough to their Nova Scotia Voyageurs American Hockey League farm club.

Riseborough, 20, the team's first-round draft choice this year, will report to the Voyageurs immediately.

Victoria harriers top B.C. classes

VANCOUVER — Two runners from Victoria won titles Saturday in the B.C. cross-country championships at Brockton Oval.

Joanie Oakley of Esquimalt Athletic Club captured the juvenile girls 4000-metre event and Jonathan Smith of Victoria Flying "Y" took the 4000-metre midget boys race.

Clubmate Karen Egger, now a student at University of British Columbia, finished third to Miss Oakley.

Smith led a one-two-three finish for Victoria competitors. Bob Noble of Esquimalt finished one second behind Smith and Kevin Kendall of Victoria Mercuries was five seconds behind the winner. Vancouver Olympic Club took the team title with Esquimalt finishing second.

In the midget girls 2000-metre event, won by VOC's Helen McDonald, June Rainey of Esquimalt was third, Ulla Hansen of Mercuries took fourth and Sharon Doherty of Esquimalt was fifth. Richmond Kajaks edged out Esquimalt for the team title.

In the 6000-metre juvenile boys run, John Martens of Kajaks nipped Tom Griffin of Mercuries by 4.5 seconds. Brian Blamey and Mike Long, both of Mercuries, finished sixth and 10th, respectively. Simon Fraser University grabbed the team title by four points over Mercuries.

Alan Baker of SFU took the 8000-metre junior boys event in 27.45 minutes, eight seconds ahead of runner-up Jim Thorne of University of Victoria.

Two course records were set in the open-division races.

Thelma Wright of UBC set the women's mark with a time of 13.13.2 minutes. Sharon Young of Esquimalt was fifth and Bev Cox of UVic came 11th in the 4000-metre run.

Tom Howard of Richmond established the new men's mark with a clocking of 37.42 minutes for the 12,000 metres. Former Victorian John Wheeler of UBC was second and another former Victoria runner, Norm Patenaude, competing for Richmond, finished ninth. Chris Garrett-Petts of Victoria Flying "Y" was 27th. UBC's "A" squad took the team title with Kajaks finishing second.

Oak Bay wins Island title

By REG REYNOLDS

Oak Bay's defence proved unbeatable again Saturday and the Bays won the Vancouver Island girls' field hockey championship.

Nancy Littley scored with less than a minute remaining in the championship final to give Oak Bay a 1-0 victory over Cowichan, the defending B.C. champions, at Lansdowne Junior High School.

Oak Bay's defence anchored by goaltender Susan Oliver, didn't allow a goal in four tournament games. In 10 league games Miss Oliver had eight shutouts and allowed just two goals.

Play was fairly even through the first half and most of the second half, but Oak Bay had the pressure on in the final minutes, and got the winner off a corner by Sue Taylor. Joan Carruthers made a fine hand stop on Miss Taylor's shot but Miss Littley scored on the rebound.

Both Cowichan and Oak Bay advance to the B.C. championship Friday and Saturday at the University of British Columbia.

Mt. Douglas, which last year shared Island honors with Cowichan, picked up the other berth in the provincial tournament, with a 1-0 win over Norfolk House in a challenge match.

Brenda Cameron overcame the outstanding goaltending of Sue Horner, and scored the Mt. Douglas goal with four minutes remaining.

Miss Horner made several difficult saves and won a penalty bully, in the match, the third of the day for both teams.

Mt. Douglas had earned third spot by defeating Brentwood College, 2-0, on a pair of goals by Roberta Feldman, but Norfolk finished fourth by edging Dunsmuir, 1-0, on a goal by Nina Bland and under tournament rules were allowed to challenge Mt. Douglas for the third B.C. berth.

Oak Bay had earned the final berth with a 3-0 win over Brentwood College, while Cowichan made the finals with a 1-0 win over Mt. Douglas.

Last year the same three teams, Oak Bay, Mt. Douglas and Cowichan played in the B.C. tournament, Mt. Douglas finished sixth and Oak Bay 10th.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Ring in changes with long skirts and blouses . . .

With the holiday season fast approaching all us gals are starting to think of assembling outfits for our festive hours . . . Do you know that, in terms of styling and fabric, you can be well-dressed for as little as $34 . . . That's what we discovered at Miss Frith's this week! . . . We saw an off-white acrylic knit at just that price . . . and pretty elegant it looked, too, with its ribbed top and sleeves and sleek skirt! . . . Miss Frith's have an unbelievably delightful collection of long dresses in prints, plains, and lurex fabrics which have just the right touch of excitement . . . Polyester fabrics, non-clinging and softly feminine . . . acrylics in the rich, earthy tones which are so much in demand this season . . . But what we want to talk most about is the blouse and skirt combination which is so very versatile . . . We saw a truly fantastic collection of long skirts . . . to team up with frilly blouses or tailored shirts . . . One particularly lovely skirt in wool with a mohair finish has zig-zag designs on a red ground . . . another stunner in that looks like lace thread design over a woven fabric, shades down from off-white to coffee brown and light to dark green . . . this one looked gorgeous topped with a dark green Qiana tailored blouse. No way we can describe all these lovelies here . . . so go see them yourself at . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1919 Douglas St., 383-7181.

A new fad in pop jewellery in San Francisco . . . flea collars for people . . . just like Fido's!

Blanket cloth coats are both warm and chic . . .

Well, all we can say after viewing Wilson's fall collection of topcoats is that there's a style and fabric to suit every taste . . . and what's more, whichever style and fabric you do choose you'll be right in the swing, fasion-wise! . . . However, this week we'd like to dwell a bit on the blanket cloth type coats which have been arriving in good numbers over the last little while . . . and are just the thing for the woman who prefers a plain solid color in her coat . . . plus warmth and lack of too much bulk in texture . . . To describe just a sampling of these all-wool topcoats . . . there's a double-breasted beige with nice detailing . . . the sort of coat which would lend itself well to the addition of a fur collar if you have one . . . There are English coats of 100% wool . . . colors like navy, beige, black, winter white, red, and camel . . . Some have raglan sleeves . . . There are wraparounds . . . Coats with and without belts . . . Styles both single and double breasted . . . The tone-on-tone coats are extremely smart to our way of thinking . . . There's a black with red stitching and red facing down the front and under the small neck-hugging collar . . . Red rimmed black buttons and a narrow patent belt with this . . . Another black coat is double-faced wool . . . black on the outside, red inside . . . with just enough red showing to make it interesting . . . A lovely forest green coat, and another in the darker bottle green . . . W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 598-2821.

The wrong accessories can ruin the most beautiful dress. The right ones can make a quite ordinary dress look special.

Gifts like you've never seen before! . . .

You know, there's been a noticeable change in the gift center of Standard Furniture's Import Shop . . . You'll find quite a lot of things here you don't usually find around town . . . and that's because while Standard has always been a leader in accessories, and started off importing fun things from all over . . . other stores got on the band wagon too . . . so now Standard decided a change was necessary and have started up-grading their quality in gift items and accessories, and are stocking things no one else has even heard of! . . . Like the little figurines with faces which are really containers for spices or all manner of other things, depending on their size . . . And the Swedish glass! You should just see all the gorgeous shapes . . . lovely man-size beer mugs . . . a really beautiful ice bucket of remarkable design and clarity . . . Very attractive candleholders of sculptured glass . . . Big and little bowls by Kosta of Sweden . . . A very unusual frosted glass bowl for fruit or what-have-you . . . Flower vases with their own built-in flower holders . . . So many other things one could spend half a day just browsing and admiring! . . . But this we do say now: Those of you looking for that "special" gift obtainable nowhere else . . . need seek no further than Standard's Import Shop . . . And these new things are just a sample of what they're getting in for Christmas! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Large and small tweeds, mainly in evergreen and golden tones, are the favorite fabrics of Spanish designer Lino of Madrid.

Choose a Sunflight tour this time . . .

Having been on several Sundlight holiday tours ourselves, we're a bit of a nut about Suntours . . . they're just so perfect in every way . . . So when Paulin's unpacked a carton full of new brochures for the fall and winter Suntour holidays the other day, we could hardly wait to get our hands on one! This year Suntours will take you to Fiji, Tahiti, Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta, San Diego, Canary Islands, Costa del Sol, Spain, Portugal and Morocco . . . and of course, Hawaii . . . and in connection with this latter destination, there are tours . . . staying at a variety of good hotels . . . direct from Victoria, instead of having to cross to Vancouver where most of the tours originate . . . There's just so much in these brochures that we're going to advise you to pick one up and read it yourself . . . You'll find that wherever you choose to go, there's a good variety of first rate hotels to suit your pocketbook . . . In many cases means are included . . . and all kinds of sightseeing and touring by motorcoach . . . As we said, we've been on Sunflight tours ourselves, and there's no question in our minds that they offer excellent value for our travel dollar . . . We've seen a lot we probably would never have seen had we travelled independently . . . and we've met a lot of charming people along the way . . . If you're looking for a good holiday this winter, give serious consideration to a Sunflight tour . . . Drop in and get all the dope from . . . Paulin Travel, 1006 Government St., 382-9168.

Geoffrey Beane put 36 gores on a daytime dress, 37 yds. of silk chiffon in a long evening dress.

You'll seldom see bedspreads like these! . . .

This week we bought ourself a long vest called a "tabard" at the Welsh Hand Loom and it looks just great with our slacks and tailored shirt . . . at least that's what everyone is telling us! . . . "Wherever did you find it?" virtual strangers enquire! . . . It's a fact, though . . . the pure wool double-woven tapestry garments made in Wales and sold exclusively at the Welsh Hand Loom are completely unique and handsome . . . While we were waiting for a lady ahead of us to be served the other day we caught sight of the single and double bedspreads, which somehow we'd missed on previous visits . . . These are tapestry too . . . completely reversible like green on one side, blue on the other, for example . . . Other color combinations include blues, greens, greys, beiges and browns . . . There's a deep fringe all around . . . and quite honestly, we've never seen bedspreads we consider more sturdy, more versatile (remember they're reversible giving two quite different looks.) . . . and mention prettier! . . . 100% pure wool, closely woven . . . (we think the browns and beiges would be especially good in a masculine room!) . . . Any colors not on hand can be ordered directly from Wales and should be here in a matter of weeks! . . . Welsh Hand Loom, Nootka Court, 634 Humboldt St., 384-7723.

Trims are important in clothes for this fall and winter.

Glamorous "special" swimsuits . . .

Just because a woman has undergone a mastectomy doesn't mean she daren't show herself around a swimming pool or cavorting in the ocean surf at some balmy resort . . . Not by a long shot! There are swimsuits designed for this very purpose which we swear look no different than any other smart swimsuit on the beach . . . In fact one of the two styles we saw at Surgical Supplies this week is a dead ringer for our own pet bathing suit . . . and we assure you we've nothing to hide! . . . This little beauty is elastized fabric, in either plain navy or a pretty white and light blue floral pattern . . . It has a low back and built-up shoulders . . . form-fitting to hold your prosthesis firmly, and with two extra strips of material which can be attached to the front or around the shoulders if necessary . . . We'd defy anybody to spot this as an especially designed swimsuit! . . . The second one we saw is a soft flowered nylon jersey top with sash belt and little matching panties . . . And talk about versatile! . . . You can wear both pieces for swimming . . . Top by itself can be used as a swimsuit cover-up or as a pant top . . . Pretty ingenious eh? . . . Mind you, we hear that lots of women who haven't had mastectomies are buying these smart swimsuits! . . . Surgical Supplies Ltd., 1012 Broad St., 384-8433.

Want to know how to run your wedding reception? . . .

While we were waiting to chat with Mrs. Robertson, Eaton's knowledgeable bridal consultant, last Monday . . . we heard her giving advice over phone to a bride-to-be, telling her what and how many to order in the way of invitations, serviettes, reply cards, etc. . . . All of which necessities, Eaton's Bridal Registry will procure for you . . . so all you have to do is make you selection, and Eaton's will do the rest . . . Mrs. Robertson tells us she's getting quite a lot of requests these days for guidance on planning wedding receptions . . . everything from the reception at a small home wedding to that at a large formal wedding . . . Without any charge at all . . . even without registering if the bride-to-be is foolish enough to pass up this bonanza . . . Mrs. Robertson or one of her assistance will give you a plan for the reception . . . and we assure you this takes a lot of the pressure off the bride's mother . . . You've really no idea just how very much Eaton's Bridal Registry can and will do for you until you've gone in and talked to them yourself . . . The Gift Preference list is great, of course, because it's so very comprehensive . . . Crystallizes your own thoughts about what you really want . . . and enables your family and friends to choose what they'd like to give you, secure in the knowledge that you really want it! . . . And don't forget to fill in a coupon for your free Bridal Shower Gift Pack . . . over $18 worth of brand-name products . . . and all yours, compliments of . . . Eaton's Bridal Registry, 382-7141, Loc. 373.

Less grease cuts change of cancer

GENOA, Italy (AFP) — Women can reduce the risk of breast cancer by avoiding greasy food, an Italian specialist said at the 11th world congress on cancer which ended Wednesday.

Japanese women have less breast cancer because their diet is based on vegetable fats rather than animal fats, Prof. Carlo Sirtori told the congress.

He said heavy fats of animal origin form corpuscles on which cancer-forming substances develop more easily.

Sirtori also said that babies can be infected with cancer before they are born by drugs taken by their mothers to guard against the danger of spontaneous abortion.

He said that one of these drugs had been taken by the mothers of 158 children who developed cancer of the genitals between the age of 15 and 20.

Smoking by pregnant women is a possible cancer hazard for their babies, Sirtori added. Nicotine is one of 30 cancer-ogenic substances that can reach a fetus through the placenta during pregnancy.

Canada rejects U.S. complaint

OTTAWA (UPI) — Canada has rejected a U.S. charge that its beef quota on imports from the United States was "highly restrictive" and accused the Americans of bungling in their own market.

METRICATION IT'S COMING

Fourth of ten columns on metric conversion created by Camosun College to help readers "think metric" by the final conversion deadline of 1980

Once upon a time (actually in the fall of 1974) there were two people, Al and Sue, who worked together. Al, often called "the boss" sat in his office behind a big desk. Sue sat with her typewriter outside Al's office and was most often called "his secretary."

One day Al heard at lunch that Canada was "going metric." Al really didn't know what that meant in business terms, so he asked Sue. She was to tell him (for she had taken a short course at Camosun College on metrication and, generally speaking, was often known for being ahead of the time).

Some of the things Sue told Al were:

- By 1980 Canada will have completed the switch to metric measurements;
- That virtually every business and industry will be affected by the change;
- That national committees are working with representatives from every aspect of business and industry in Canada to facilitate and co-ordinate the change.

"Wait a minute," pleaded Al. "That's all well and good, but how is metrication going to affect us?"

"Well," said Sue, "first off you'll have to adopt metric measurement as a way of thinking. When you place orders it's no more feet, pounds and quarts. And our company invoices will be sent out in metric units. We'll probably want to use metric stationery and envelopes and . . ."

Al's very audible groan cut Su short. "How am I going to cope with all this change?" exclaimed Al. "Is it going to be worth it?"

Sue contemplated her boss for a moment. "Worth it? The experience of those countries who have converted to metric have shown that businesses have benefitted financially and secretaries like me love the ease of using metric units."

"But what about me," asked Al.

"Well, at the time of each major change," replied Sue, "there will be extensive educational and information programs for people like you and me. Camosun College will be offering courses and workshops as needed by the business community. They will even design courses to meet the specific needs of our company staff."

Al was so relieved to hear that the change to metrication was being done with guys like him in mind that he decided to help the process along.

"Sue," he said very firmly, "from now on all letters from this office will be typed on A4 metric size paper and mailed in DL envelopes." (If you don't know about Al and DL envelopes ask Sue or better yet call Camosun and register for a metric course.)

Oh yes. Al and Sue worked very happily together through the change to metrication, but in 1980 . . . but that's another story!

Metrice Measurement — Capacity

Litre is the metric measurement for capacity or the liquid content of a container.

Litres (abbreviated l) are used to measure such things as milk, gasoline, paint and large quantities of water.

For example:

$5.00 will buy approximately 36 litres of gasoline.

A 6 cup teapot holds about one litre.

One gallon .....litres

Estimate the capacity of the following items in litres:

We're basically nice people

By MERLE ELLIS

Basically, butchers are nice people. I sometimes wonder if we haven't each and all had, at one point along the line, some brief moment of mental lapse, which accounts for our becoming what we are. But we are, nonetheless, basically nice people. Warm, friendly, courteous (at times a little fresh, perhaps) and, most importantly, helpful.

Your butcher has the knowledge and is in the position to give you a lot of good advice on how to eat better for less if you will only ask. Don't be afraid to ring the bell, if you have to, to talk to the butcher fact to face.

When you ask your friendly butcher for assistance in stretching your food dollar, you must understand that in spite of being griped at, boycotted and generally bombarded with abuse for the better half of 1973, and trying (as we all are) to make a living under some rather rough economic circumstances so far this year, he is not being facetious when he suggests you stuff the piece of meat he hands you.

What he is offering is an almost magic method of making all manner of meat go much, much further. There are dozens of cuts of meat that can be effectively stuffed with an appropriate dressing and appropriately dressed with an effective sauce — much to the bentfit of both palate and pocket.

Ham, ram, zip, zam, bull, beef and buffalo are all, or almost all, excellent for stuffing; so are the more familiar beef round, rock cod, breast of chicken, veal, lamb and capon. But if all the stuffable possibilitits available in your butcher's meat case, the most money saving potential, particularly at this time of year, is likely to be the bottom round or rump roast.

Both the rump and bottom round are solid muscles and both are, by nature, a little on the tough side. Normally, that would be a disadvantage, but when you're planning on stuffing, those qualities are definitely desirable. There are hundreds of good recipes for roulades or beef rolls, but the one that has become a favorite in my family is this very simple one:

6 ¼-in. slices beef rump
6 tsp. prepared mustard
1 onion, peeled, cut in 6 wedges
3 slices bacon, cut in half
1 large dill pickle, cut in 6 wedges
1 carrot, chopped
1 stalk celery, chopped
½ cup flour
Salt, pepper to taste
3 T. cooking oil
1 12-oz. bottle beer
Arrowroot, cold water

Trim any excess fat from meat. With a mallet or rolling pin, pound each piece of meat a few good whacks to make it good and thin.

Spread each piece with a teaspoon of mustard. Near one edge of each piece, place a strip of bacon, a wedge of onion and a piece of pickle. Roll up jellyroll fashion, secure with toothpicks and lace with string.

Put flour, salt and pepper in a bag. Add meat rolls, two or three at a time, and shake, coating well.

Heat oil in a heavy skillet or electric grying pan over moderate heat until it begins to sputter. Add the floured meat rolls and brown well on all sides. Reduce heat to low, add celery, carrots and half the beer. Cover and simmer for about 1½ hours, until tender. Turn the rolls once or twice during cooking and add more beer, if needed. If you've drunk it, don't worry — use water.

Remove rolls to a warm platter. Remove toothpicks and string. Strain the cooking liquid and return it to the pan over high heat. Thicken with a little arrowroot dissolved in water; cook until bubbling. Pour sauce over meat rolls and serve.

This dish is good with boiled potatoes and sauteed red cabbage. Freeze any leftover beef rolls in their sauce. They are every bit as good, perhaps better, the second time around.

Woman driver meeting Hydro

Penny Harding will meet this week with B.C. Hydro officials to find out why they won't hire her as a bus driver. The meeting was arranged by a provincial human rights officer, who will also attend the meeting.

Ms. Harding claims she was denied a driving job although she has four years of bus-driving experience, while inexperienced men were hired.
